| Abstract | The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969. |

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (●). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fished product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.

3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.

4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

“Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

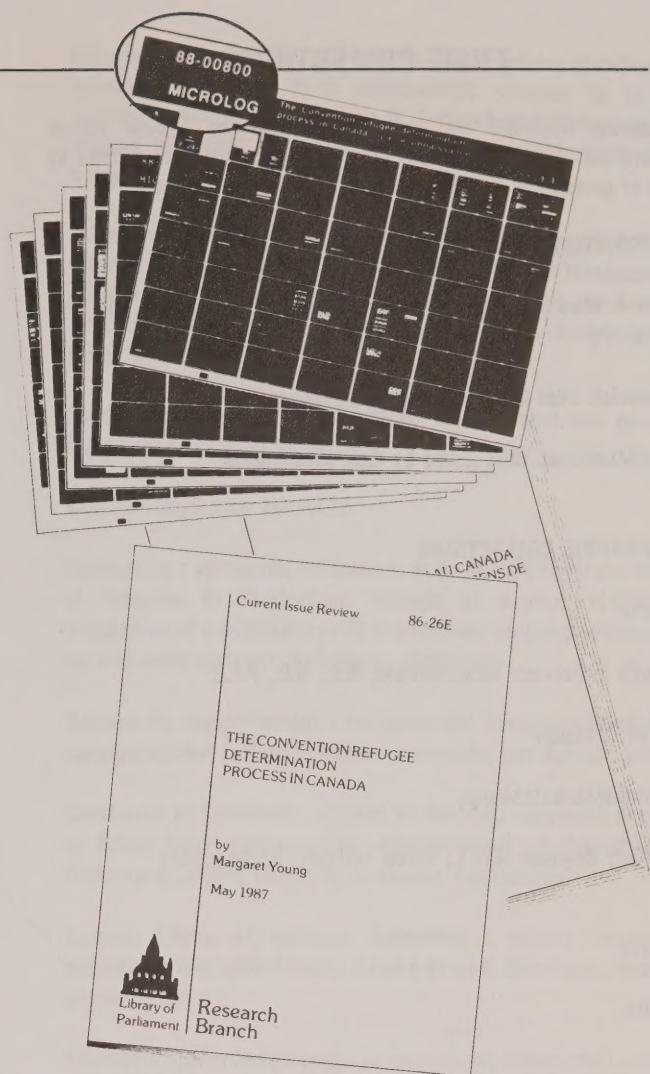

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

MICROLOG 95-07601 (5 fiche)

The Newfoundland cod-tagging database contains detailed records of 205,422 cod released in 177 different tagging studies during 1954-55, 1962-66, and 1978-93. The cod, tagged with disc and dangle and T-bar anchor tags, were released from all major coastal regions of southern and eastern Newfoundland; offshore releases were concentrated on the northeastern Newfoundland Shelf and the north central Grand Bank. Recaptures have been reported from virtually all areas of the Shelf, Grand Banks, Flemish Cap, Gulf of St Lawrence, and eastern Scotian Shelf. This report provides an overall yet comprehensive statistical and spatial-temporal summary of the primary data contained in the database, including size and number of cod tagged and released, sex, parasite infections, time between release and recapture, and water temperatures. Summaries of each tagging experiment are also included. The appendix describes the data formats in the database.

By P.R. Kendall. Toronto : Toronto Dept. of Public Health, 1995. xii, 138 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-08022 (2 fiche)

This report provides information on as broad a range of indicators as possible to provide a picture of the health status of Toronto residents over time. The report begins with statistical data on the Toronto population, including demographics, ethnicity, and dependency ratio. This is followed by a section on the determinants of health, including employment, income, housing, child care, crime, and accidents. The sections on health status include statistics on mortality, causes of death, communicable diseases, environmental health, oral health, substance abuse, tobacco use, nutrition, sexual health, mental health, and physical activity. A glossary is included.

2021 projections for Ottawa-Carleton, prospects for population, housing, jobs and urban land : regional plan review

Ottawa-Carleton (Ont.). Planning & Property Dept. Policy Division. Ottawa : The Division, 1995. ix, 37 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-07507 (1 fiche)

This report assesses the prospects for future growth in Ottawa-Carleton in four key areas: population, including natural increase and migration; employment, projected both on a demographic and an economic basis; households and housing, including headship rates, housing type, and household size; and urban land requirements, both residential and non-residential. The report also includes population projections for the Outaouais and adjacent eastern Ontario municipalities. The report introduction describes the method and model used for making the projections. Statistics are included for 1991 and in some cases for earlier years. The purpose of the projections contained in the report is to serve as a basis for identifying issues and quantifying some of the dimensions of change facing the Ottawa-Carleton regional community.

This project had the purpose of educating intercity coach operators and their staff and to improve the overall accessibility of intercity coaches (particularly charter and tour services) to persons with disabilities. This report presents the results of the project, beginning with a survey of the North American charter coach industry and a review of disability and coach travel. The report then examines the requirements of coach users who are disabled and develops design alternatives to enhance the accessibility of coach transportation. Proposals are offered to implement design developments such as accessible seats, low-riser boarding systems, and safety features. The report also reviews research and demonstration projects in the field of accessible charter coach services and assesses future developments. The appendices include summaries of comments from user panel groups, a training program for coach drivers and attendants serving persons with disabilities, and a coach design portfolio.

This report describes an acoustic sensor module (ASM) for an ocean bottom seismometer designed to make quantitative measurements of sea floor vibrations at frequencies of 1 to 50 Hertz, ranging in level from ambient noise to explosions. Requirements to have an instrument with a noise floor below ambient and an ability to faithfully follow the sea floor motion led to a design using 4.5-Hertz geophones contained in a 25-centimeter diameter spherical pressure vessel, attached to a 66-centimeter diameter coupling disk, with a total mass of 20 kilograms. The coupling disk mass is minimized by using a tetrahedral cell structure to stiffen it, and is effectively rigid at 50 Hertz. The report also presents results of a performance verification of the ASM as obtained in field tests, as well as mathematical analyses of the sensor response.

This report assesses the adequacy and suitability of existing technology, from the point of view of construction industry activity, in the repair and renovation of infrastructure facilities. The technical issues discussed include construction methods, maintenance, use of recycled materials and new materials, design, and material degradation in road construction; trenched and trenchless methods in buried infrastructure construction; frost action, corrosion and aging of buried infrastructure; corrosion, design, and condition assessment of bridges; disposal of dredged material from harbors; and tunnelling and lining methods. The report also discusses related non-technical issues such as the lack of trained civil engineers, the obstacles to introducing new technologies, and the fragmentation of responsibility for infrastructure across Canada.

Aircraft boarding equipment and procedures for passengers in wheelchairs

This report reviews the current practice in air travel for persons who use wheelchairs. The report considers the travel process as being composed of individual links in a chain of events which must be successfully negotiated before the trip will be completed. For the wheelchair traveller, the connection between the links often entails a transfer, and this is where special problems are encountered. On a typical trip, starting at check-in and arriving at the baggage claim, a typical wheelchair passenger must be physically transferred two to six times, depending on type of aircraft. The report notes current limitations with using the passenger's own wheelchair, the carrier's terminal chair, and the carrier's on-board chair, as well as the lack of technology to transfer passengers to and from seats. The report recommends several ways of alleviating these problems by reducing the number of transfers required and by introducing new technologies.

Airworthiness of lithium batteries, part 1 : development of an airworthiness standard

By George J. Donaldson and Matthew G. Black.
Ottawa : Dept. of National Defence, 1995. 15 p. : ill., Bibl.

MICROLOG 95-07966 (1 fiche)

In the air element of the Canadian Forces, lithium batteries have been used since 1979 in three types of search and rescue beacons: emergency locator transmitters, personal locator beacons, and crash position indicators. The potential for hazardous behavior, one of the main disadvantages of lithium batteries, was recognized early on; hazards from lithium batteries can include deflagration and fumes or fire, which can cause serious accidents in aircraft. This paper discusses the approach being taken by Canadian Forces to develop an airworthiness standard for lithium batteries used in military aircraft. The paper reviews characteristics of the aerospace environment that influence the application of lithium battery technology, the lithium battery qualification process, safety design criteria, performance requirements, and test plans.

AOSTRA, a 15 year portfolio of achievement

Edmonton : Alberta Oil Sands Technology & Research Authority, 1992. 174 p. : ill. MICROLOG 95-07816 (2 fiche)

The Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority (AOSTRA) is an Alberta Crown corporation that funds and coordinates technology development and dissemination in the fields of oil sands, heavy oil, and enhanced recovery technologies. This book describes the history and mandate of AOSTRA, its principles of operation, and its guidelines for research and development. It then reviews AOSTRA activities and achievements over the first 15 years of the Authority's history in the fields of oil sands/heavy oil recovery, petroleum processing, waste treatment and environmental protection, and various research and technology initiatives such as its university program, cooperation with research councils and industry institutes, information services, and technology transfer in other countries.

This report summarizes work conducted on the application of amorphous metals to sonar projectors and hydrophones, experimental investigations of possible applications of those materials to acoustic transducers, and the assembly and testing of the Mark VI Terfenol projector. The report begins with a review of some of the characteristics of metallic glass alloys relevant to acoustic transducers. It then describes the design of magnetostrictive transducers using amorphous materials, the design and construction of a magnetostrictive barrel-stave projector for application in low-frequency sonar and underwater communications, and the application of amorphous structural composites to acoustic projectors.

The Application of ship motion data in a computer model evaluation and a research vessel motion intercomparison

This report summarizes the results of a study initiated to examine ways of quantifying the motion characteristics of different fisheries research ships operating in the Scotia-Fundy region. The investigators compared predictions of response amplitude operators obtained using two computer models, HANSEL and SHIPMO, with those obtained during actual sea trial data from the CSS Dawson. The report also presents results from ship motion trials on the CSS Parizeau, a ship of similar design and vintage that replaced the Dawson in the research vessel fleet. In these trials, ship motion and wave data were collected in an experiment similar to that conducted on the Dawson; from the data sets, characteristic curves which quantify the unique dynamic response of the two ships were calculated.

This report presents results from a multimedia geochemical study of several sites in the Abitibi greenstone belt of northeastern Ontario where known gold and base metal mineralization is covered by glaciolacustrine or glaciofluvial sediments. The objective was to determine whether the dispersion of elements in water-saturated overburden is sufficient to produce a detectable response at surface in water from drainage pathways, organic-rich media in drainage pathways, and A and B horizon soils. The report includes description of the sampling and analytical procedures, of the bedrock and surficial geology in the study area, and of the geochemical anomalies observed in soils, surface water, and organic streambank and peat media. The relationship between surface trace element geochemistry and mineralization is assessed and the dispersal mechanisms are discussed. The appendices include element frequency distributions.

An Aquarium test as an explosive performance measure

By Grant McIntosh. Valcartier, PQ : Dept. of National Defence Canada, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Valcartier, 1994. vii, 24 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREV memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Valcartier ; TM-9426) MICROLOG 95-07956 (1 fiche)

The aquarium test gives an idea of the relative performance of explosives by measuring the acceleration of the water around a detonating explosive. This report presents results of an aquarium test conducted to measure the performance of an explosive formulation denoted as Composition B and of two plastic-bonded explosives, CX-84A and CHM. The test consisted of detonating a bare cylinder of the explosive in a water bath and recording the radial positions of the shock wave in the water and water/explosive interface as a function of time at a given distance along the cylinder. The shock radii generated by the three explosives were compared at later times, several microseconds after the detonation front passed. A larger radius is interpreted as resulting from a more powerful explosive. The report also describes computer simulations using the WONDY V and DYNA2D programs to determine the water/explosive interface position and the position of the shock wave in the water as a function of time.

VTS radars are non-coherent marine radars with limited signal processing to combat the effects of clutter and other interference, and mostly use trackers that lack sufficient sophistication to follow targets in high-clutter situations or to reliably maintain tracks in the presence of many close-by targets. This report attempts to characterize some of the more critical knowledge used by human marine traffic regulators to perform the tracking function and explains ways to implement these processes using artificial intelligence techniques. The report also describes the architecture and conceptual design of an artificial intelligence based tracker for marine VTS applications. The design includes a multiple hypothesis tracker and uses an intelligent geographic information system to incorporate environment based information. The main knowledge-based system in this architecture is the Dynamic Transit Model.

This report analyzes the expected corrosion behavior of nuclear fuel waste containers in a conceptual Canadian disposal vault. The container materials considered are dilute titanium alloys and oxygen-free copper. The report presents various models that have been developed to predict container lifetimes, including the currently used model which does not take into account limitation of crevice corrosion and an outline of a model in which crevice corrosion is limited by repassivation. The disposal vault conditions considered change with time as the initially trapped oxygen is consumed and as the heat and radiation produced by the waste decay. The appendices contain detailed reassessments of the corrosion behavior of the two types of containers, in which model assumptions are examined and failure modes discussed.

This document presents the Alberta government's resource management policy for public land and resources within the Athabasca River Sandhills planning area, covering about 416 square kilometers along the Athabasca River near Fort Assiniboine in central Alberta. The area is heavily used for recreation and for resource uses such as grazing, timber harvesting, and hydrocarbon exploration and development. The document sets out the policy and planning context for developing the area's integrated resource plan, outlines data collection and analysis procedures, and describes the area resource management strategy, which is intended to allow for the potential development and use of a range of available resources while maintaining environmental integrity. The strategy uses zoning categories that designate land for varying degrees of protection, resource management, and development. The document concludes by outlining administrative procedures and mechanisms for plan implementation, monitoring, and amendment.

The best and fastest method of distinguishing herring of different origins relies on differences in the structure of their otoliths. This paper reports an attempt to distinguish between the different geographical populations (local stocks) of Baltic herring within the main spring-spawning group of the species, on the basis of differences in the size and ratios of eleven characteristic morphological elements of the otoliths of juvenile spring-spawning herring taken on various fishing grounds in 1982.

This booklet is intended to encourage a broader approach to reducing the occurrence and severity of occupational back injuries. It discusses how a job can be designed to reduce the likelihood of a back injury and is aimed at those who can best carry out those changes, such as managers and engineers. After a review of common approaches to controlling back injury in the workplace, such as worker education and training, worker selection, and work hardening, the booklet describes the ergonomic approach. It notes some personal and workplace risk factors and provides guidelines on assessing, evaluating, and monitoring the worksite for risk factors, and on redesigning high-risk tasks to reduce or eliminate the risks associated with four basic categories of risk factors: object factors such as weight, force, and depth that produce stressful loads on the body; task factors; organizational factors; and environmental factors.

Backgrounding is an emerging sector of the cattle industry in Saskatchewan, and is an option for farmers who would like to utilize excess roughages or put added weight on calves after weaning. Backgrounding refers to the growing, feeding, and managing of steers and heifers from weaning until they enter a feedlot and are placed on a high-concentrate finishing ration. Backgrounding increases the value of cattle, utilizes local feed supplies, and keeps more cattle for local feedlots to access. This publication provides basic information on markets, production, and economics of backgrounding in Saskatchewan. It includes sample budgets to assist in assessing the economic opportunity for establishing a cattle backgrounding enterprise. Options covered in the publication include backgrounding calves on feed or on pasture, and backgrounding in summer or winter.

This report describes a sediment transport model being developed for modelling the dispersion and transport of suspended sediment in the benthic boundary layer on the continental shelf. A key feature of the model is the simplified representation of vertical mixing through the random shuffling of packets of material and the use of observational suspended sediment profiles as probability density functions for the overall vertical distribution. Horizontal transport is then represented through advection of the packets in vertically- and time-varying flow fields taken from observations or from a numerical circulation model. The effective horizontal dispersion rates in the model are consistent with fundamental ideas about shear dispersion. The report includes results of numerical experiments illustrating the effects of different current regimes, vertical distribution rates, and mixing rates on dispersion of seabed drilling discharges.

The paper presents four simulation test cases that demonstrate the capabilities of the algorithm, with two real data examples illustrating the use of the method with actual lofagram and FRAZ images. Only qualitative comparisons of the original and restored images are given, as the technique greatly changes picture details, but maintains the original image's appearance. The compression algorithm has desirable features such as data independence, minimal computation, and fixed compress and decompress processing times that suit it ideally to real-time applications. The basic implementation of the algorithm yields compression ratios of 4:1.

A principal objective of the project described in this report was the study of the diversity of bird communities in different seral stages of the aspen ecosystem in the sub-boreal spruce of the Prince Rupert Forest Region. The investigator examined clearcuts, sapling aspen, mature aspen, old aspen, and mixed aspen-conifer stands and counted birds over two years using a modified point count method. Data analysis included using a detrended correspondence analysis ordination procedure to reveal differences and similarities in bird communities in different seral stages. Habitat relations of the 16 most abundant species were analyzed by multiple regression. The results reported include the relationship between ecological age of the seral stage and the bird species richness, abundance, and diversity. The report also suggests implications of aspen removal, either commercially or by land clearing, on communities of breeding birds in the region.

This report presents the findings of an independent inquiry into two particular issues associated with the negotiation of modern treaties between Canada and aboriginal peoples: the surrender issue resulting from the requirement under the federal Comprehensive Land Claims Policy that native peoples cede, release, and surrender their rights to land and resources in exchange for defined rights and benefits set out in a treaty; and whether there are ways to provide certainty with respect to the land and resource rights of all interested parties, without requiring a surrender of aboriginal rights. The report includes extensive discussion of why native peoples consider the surrender of their aboriginal rights unacceptable and offensive, and explains the desire of native peoples to have their rights formally recognized in treaties. The report also discusses the issue of certainty and how it can be established. Finally, it describes an altered approach to treaty making that may assist in establishing a new relationship between government and native peoples.

Ottawa : Industry Canada, 1995. iii, 87 p. French ed. (La Loi canadienne sur les sociétés...) : 95-08042/2.

The term 'going-private transaction' (GPT) is a generic label applying to a variety of corporate transactions that result in termination of shareholder interests with compensation but without consent, and without a replacement of equivalent value in a participating security. Treatment of GPTs in the Canada Business Corporations Act has been less than thorough, which may have caused confusion in the marketplace. This paper examines GPTs, parallel statutory models, and various areas for potential reform by setting out a number of issues for discussion, each identifying various options. These issues include whether the Act should be amended to expressly permit GPTs, standards of fairness for GPTs, whether GPTs should be allowed for private companies, whether the Act should be amended to confirm that share consolidations trigger dissent and appraisal rights, and whether the Act should be amended to allow compelled acquisitions.

This report describes a cross-site analysis of victim offender mediation programs in four Canadian cities. The analysis focused largely on the perceived impact of the mediation process on the victims and offenders who participated in it. The methodology included interviews with criminal justice officials and observations of mediation sessions to examine how the mediation process actually works and to identify similarities and differences between the program sites. The report includes three case examples of mediation sessions and a copy of the interview schedule used with the criminal justice officials.

An examination of data from Statistics Canada's Family Expenditure Surveys indicates that there were accompanying shifts in income and housing consumption for specific groups of Canadians. The nature of these changes is the subject of this report.

Capillary zone electrophoresis analysis and detection of mid-spectrum biological warfare agents

Mid-spectrum biological warfare agents such as proteins, peptides, and toxins are often difficult to analyze and often require individually developed assay methods for detection and identification. In this regard, capillary electrophoresis is an important, emerging technique for separation and quantitation of peptides and proteins, providing separation efficiencies up to two orders of magnitude greater than high performance liquid chromatography. The technique can also analyze a broad range of compounds, has a simple instrument design which can be automated, and has low sample volume requirements. In this study, a highly efficient and reproducible capillary zone electrophoresis method was developed to separate and identify a series of nine peptides of defense interest including bradykinin, leucine enkephalin, and oxytocin. The paper demonstrates three strategies which could be used in a fully automated field detection and identification system for unknown peptides.

The process described in this manual has been developed to assist Alberta health authorities and government to provide appropriate direction and control over health capital expenditure and to ensure that each potential project is considered on the basis of relative merit and health care benefit. It first sets out the components of the regional capital plan: needs identification, assessment and screening; programming studies; and plan preparation. The manual then presents the provincial capital guidelines, or key criteria which capital proposals must meet. It details the ten areas of examination of the programming study, which must be completed before requesting provincial funding. Finally, the manual presents the rating scale used for setting priorities for capital projects. This scale contains 11 criteria, and a project's score relative to other projects being considered determines the project's priority.

This report presents the results from the computational fluid dynamics simulation of the building infiltration process of a liquefied natural gas (heavy gas) cloud. The simulation attempts to capture the heavy gas infiltration process on a typical field observation building located about 200 meters downwind of a spilled pool of liquefied natural gas. The software used was TASCflow Version 2.3, which employs a finite-volume methodology for solving the three-dimensional Reynolds-averaged conservative equations for mass, momentum, energy, and chemical species which govern the transport processes in complex geometries. The report contains the predictions, in numerical and graphical form, of the development of the heavy gas concentration, temperature distribution, and flow field. The report also discusses the numerical approach, such as computational grid generation and initial and boundary conditions, and the main features of TASCflow.

The simulation used TASCflow Version 2.3 computational fluid dynamics software, a finite-volume method-based code that solves the three-dimensional Reynolds-averaged conservation equations for the mass, momentum, energy, and chemical species that govern transport processes in complex geometries. The paper contains the results of computation in numerical and graphical form of the time history of the development of the heavy gas concentration, temperature, and flow field. The research used the Canadian Parliamentary Guide as the main source of data on the legislators' background. Analysis of the data was limited to three variables: gender, education, and occupation prior to election. The paper also compares the characteristics of Manitoba legislators with those of federal legislators.

This report describes a continuing research program on the language and literacy development of three-to-five year olds. Major objectives of the program were to advance knowledge of children's earliest theories about the nature and interpretation of text, and to determine whether these notions affect oral development. Examination of these issues consisted of the following: further analyses of the development of the say/mean or text/interpretation distinction; analysis of the development of the notion of the fixity of text; and analysis of young children's theories about the relations among text, interpretation, and knowledge in written language presented orally. The conclusions relate to the development of a particular attitude to language as a central dimension of literacy. The appendices include a number of papers on such subjects as literacy and cognition, literate thought, understanding of ambiguity, and understanding of textual invariance.

Finally, the report assesses the industry's strengths (low costs of startup and operation, availability of tree farm sites and labor) and weaknesses (including lack of government support, moose damage, lack of technical experts). The report concludes with recommendations regarding Christmas tree farming policies and government support for the industry.

MICROLOG 95-07958 (1 fiche)

This document describes an application of the ALPINEX (Aperture, Linear-Predictive Interpolation and Extrapolation) technique, recently introduced for narrowband line-array beamforming, to the area of beamforming with a horizontal circular array. Of particular interest is the enhanced resolution and detection performance as a function of parameters such as array radius, signal strength and location, noise levels, and number of sensors. The approach used is model-based and involves a simple transformation which maps the circular array problem into an equivalent line-array problem, thus introducing the notion of a pseudo line-array. The document discusses complications of using the pseudo array approach, including the different characteristics of the ambient and self-noise, the number of pseudo-array sensors which can be usefully retained in the processing stage, and the potential for aliasing artifacts.

This study was designed to test the feasibility of one approach to conserving the older stock of highrise apartment buildings in Toronto. Conservation is defined as long-term repairs or improvements required to preserve the life of a structure. The study involved wide consultation with affected parties, including tenants, landlords, government, and building engineers. Specifically, the study examines a program made of the following key elements: creation of a new conservation standards bylaw; a focus on conservation of the building structure and systems, including walls, roof, concrete, and electrical system; periodic inspection by qualified professionals; costs to be borne by building owners and/or passed through to tenants; followup to be conducted; and an arbitration process to allow for appeals. The high costs of conservation as revealed in this study require a phased program in which full conservation would be achieved in stages.

This paper compares means, variances, and distributions of published survival rates for Pacific salmon across species and life-history stages. The paper also estimates the contribution of freshwater and marine habitats to total recruitment variation, and re-examines differences among species first considered by Neave (1948) using the much larger database that is now available. The study methods include a statistical distribution of salmon survival rates, a statistical analysis of mortality, and comparison of empirical estimates of mean mortality for each species to an estimate of egg-adult mortality derived from fecundity. Species considered in this paper include Oncorhynchus gorbuscha, O. keta, O. nerka, O. kisutch, and O. tshawytscha.

The Canadian government created an advisory council to provide advice on 15 issues related to development of a Canadian strategy for the information highway. Such a strategy would be based on the objectives of job creation, reinforcement of Canadian sovereignty and identity, and ensuring universal access at reasonable cost. In addition, the strategy would be guided by four operating principles: competition, privacy protection/network security, collaborative private/public sector development, and an interconnected and interoperable network of networks. This report reviews the council's deliberations and conclusions on those issues, in chapters covering the nature of the information highway, competitiveness and job creation, Canadian content and culture, the human dimension, learning and training, research and development, and implementation. The report concludes with the council's recommendations. Appendices include a glossary.

One of the more difficult surficial glacial deposit types to regenerate following timber harvest is boulder till, consisting of unstratified deposits of boulders, gravel, sand and clay mixed in any proportion. In northern Ontario, forested boulder till sites commonly have an unconsolidated organic layer which is quick-draining and supports limited vegetation following harvest disturbance. This report summarizes findings of a trial that examined the practice of planting overwintered black spruce seedlings through the organic mat, with and without light screening, as an alternative to continuous furrow site preparation on boulder till areas in northwest Ontario. The objective of the trial was to determine the extent of microsite influence on height increment and survival of black spruce container stock seedlings planted in that fashion.

By David R. Olson and Nandita Babu. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1989. 17 p. : Bibl. (OISE project / Ontario Institute for Studies in Education ; 1088-84) Presented at the Conference on Critical Thinking. ON-TERIS ON07614

This paper regards critical thinking as something that can be taught, practiced, and exercised, but criticizes assumptions often made about it: that it is characterized by abstractness, systematicity, appropriateness, and validity; and that it consists of a set of principles or rules which can be taught and specified in a curriculum devoted to critical thinking skills and dispositions. The paper offers a theory of subjectivity and reflectivity that could help give content to such a notion as critical thinking. It suggests that children should adopt a critical stance towards texts, involving characterization of the utterances of oneself or another from a theoretical point of view as examples of particular speech acts or mental states. This ability to characterize what is said and thought might define a suitable candidate for a distinctive, critical, and metacognitive competence.

MICROLOG 95-07517 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

Mainstream development discourse has focused on economic, social, and political conditions that need to be changed, and tends to ignore inputs and activities that cannot be quantified. This publication considers the cultural, moral, and spiritual dimensions of human well-being, and their integration into a variety of development paradigms. It discusses the failures of western-style economic ideologies, cultural values at the service of economics and technology, the positive resources available in spiritual values and systems, alternative components of development such as nongovernmental organizations, and nonconventional research which takes into consideration a people's values and beliefs.

Current wildlife projects in Alberta, September 1994 - September 1995

By Greg Radstaak. Vegreville, AB : Alberta Environmental Centre, 1995. 42 p.
MICROLOG 95-08160 (1 fiche)

This document lists wildlife research and projects ongoing in Alberta, covering the continuum from invertebrate to vertebrate species. The projects and research are first arranged in broad categories (fish, amphibians and reptiles, birds, mammals, biodiversity and general projects) and then taxonomically. Species or species groups within orders are organized alphabetically to facilitate searching. Projects that cover more than one order are grouped at the end of the report. Information provided for each project includes species or category studied, location of research, sponsoring agency, title and brief description, and contact name and phone number. A separate list of contact names, addresses, and phone numbers is appended.

Avant que la société québécoise ne détermine ses orientations et procède à l'ensemble de ses choix en matière de partage de responsabilités, de compétences et d'organisation interne, il est essentiel que tous les partenaires concernés par la décentralisation se soient préalablement donné une lecture commune de sa réalité et de ses enjeux. Ce document se penche sur la décentralisation et examine les points suivants : les attentes de la population; l'état de la situation sur la décentralisation au Québec; les enjeux pour la société québécoise; la décentralisation dans un Québec souverain; les limites du statut de province pour une décentralisation majeure; et, les modalités de mise en oeuvre d'un nouveau pacte de décentralisation dans un état souverain.

Les événements qui se sont produits entre la fin des années 1970 et le début des années 1990 font de cette période un objet d'étude important. Au cours de ces années, l'économie a glissé dans la récession, a connu une reprise graduelle puis est retombée ensuite dans la récession. En parallèle, la société canadienne s'est développée et a connu une évolution dynamique. En étudiant les données de l'Enquête sur les dépenses des familles de Statistique Canada, on constate des changements dans les revenus et la consommation de logement parmi des groupes bien définis de Canadiens. Ce rapport a trait à la nature de ces changements.

Une connaissance de la période de reproduction du choquemort de l'estuaire de la Miramichi est essentielle pour la planification d'études écotoxicologiques visant à évaluer les effets des contaminants sur la santé et la reproduction des poissons. Nous avons étudié la période de reproduction chez une population de choquemorts de l'estuaire de la Miramichi en mesurant hebdomadairement, de mai à août 1993, le rapport gonadosomatique, le stade de maturité des gonades, le pourcentage de femmes ayant des oeufs matures, la fécondité, les concentrations plasmatiques d'estradiol et de testostérone. La période de ponte a duré environ 9 semaines, de la fin mai à la fin juillet et elles étaient discontinues avec 4 pics de ponte. La fécondité individuelle a été estimée à plus de 200 oeufs par acte de ponte et la relation linéaire entre la fécondité et la taille de la femelle a été évaluée. De plus, les changements dans la condition et le rapport hépatosomatique des poissons ont été décrits.

The STRATUS project has the goal of designing a prototype expert advisory system to assist meteorologists in production of the low cloud portion of airport terminal weather forecasts. The prototype integrates numerical, physical, and heuristic methods to forecast low clouds and provides a number of data visualization and data transfer tools. The emphasis in system design was on the fundamental physical principles that govern cloud formation and dissipation, which makes STRATUS readily adaptable in principle to new location. The main emphasis of the third phase of this project, described in this report, was on improving the analysis and integrated forecasting facilities of the interactive tephigram (the main tool for vertical profiles of the atmosphere) and on development of a computer-assisted training prototype which uses hypermedia to teach tephigram theory and practice to operational meteorologists. STRATUS programs are interactive, bilingual, and run in a UNIX/X Windows environment.

This report illustrates work done to design and produce an anamorphic beam-expander to illuminate Bragg cells in a time-integrating correlator. The basic element of the beam expander is a lens which is an aspherical element capable of producing a beam with a uniform intensity diverging in one dimension on the X axis; on the other axis, the beam size is determined only by the divergence of the laser beam. The work included correction of the wavefront emerging from the lens by an aspherical lens, by a holographic optical element, and by a glass diffractive element. The conclusion of the report selects the best design which would collimate the diverging beam exiting from the lens and correct the wavefront in order to obtain the best flatness possible, while still retaining the uniform intensity of the beam on the X-axis.

This report presents results of the second phase of a project conducted to evaluate the effectiveness of nitrogen oxide reduction technology for heavy-duty diesel engines using lean nitrogen oxide technology. The study used a Detroit Diesel Series 50 engine fitted with hardware and software developed for the reductant injection system and with various state-of-the-art catalytic units supplied by five manufacturers. The investigators conducted tests under steady state and transient conditions using diesel fuel as the reductant. The results reported include the observed reduction in nitrogen oxide emissions over a modified Environmental Protection Agency transient cycle, comparisons with emissions when the engine had no catalyst installed, and catalyst efficiencies in terms of changes in emissions of nitrogen oxides, total hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide, and carbon dioxide.

Development of a 64-speed binary logic transmission for transit buses

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada ; by J. Hugh Kerr. Kingston, ON : Ker-Train Systems Ltd., 1994. vii, 27 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-07656 (1 fiche)

It has long been recognized that eliminating the operating restraints imposed on a diesel engine by restrictive, inefficient automotive-type transmissions would be a big step forward in addressing the problem of diesel exhaust pollutants. To remove all transmission-imposed restraints from the operation of a bus diesel engine, a positive, efficient, infinitely variable transmission is required. This report reviews the development of a proprietary 64-bit binary logic transmission with incremental ratio changes of under 5% and an overall ratio of 20:1, which makes it a quasi-infinitely variable transmission for practical purposes. The final transmission design consists of a modified Allison casing from a 40-passenger bus, with the existing three-speed gearing replaced by a series of six gear sets. Each set is effectively a bi-ratio stage of the transmission, giving a total of 64 ratios.

This report summarizes the second phase of testing in the development of a nondestructive inspection system for detection of corrosion in aircraft fuselage lap joints. The process is based on D Sight, an optical technique. The second phase dealt with the specification, design, and building of the sensor prototype hardware and software. In addition, the developers conducted further accelerated corrosion testing to elucidate the corrosion process for different lap joint structures. They then simulated the process using finite element modelling and used D Sight simulation of images from the resultant surface profiles to establish the similarity between the model and actual lap splice corrosion. Three major field trials were conducted to gain ex-

This project describes the development of a prototype videotape with teacher's guide to help grade 7 and 8 core French students develop listening comprehension skills and to encourage the productive skills of speaking and writing. The videotape features the language of Canadian francophones in natural situations, based on the common interests of Canadian young people. It incorporates current research and theory and encourages users to look for and use as comprehension tools such factors as facial expression, body language, repetitions and redundancies, context, and previous experience. The researchers also developed activities associated with the tape, which include production tasks. The project attempts to remedy a situation in which core French students, many of whom have studied French for almost four years, are unable to understand even the gist of a conversation on familiar topics carried on by native speakers.

Development of a time-lapse photographic analysis of sweating pattern : final report

By Oded Bar-Or and Randolph E. Calvert. North York, ON : National Defence, Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine, 1992. 87 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-07952 (1 fiche)

This paper begins with an extensive review of methods previously used to assess the pattern of local sweating. The review shows the difficulties of obtaining data on regional sweating rates. The paper then documents a project conducted to develop a time-lapse photography method that can yield information about dynamic changes in sweat population density, average sweat drop area, and proportion of skin covered by sweat, and which can serve as an inexpensive method to document sweating rates, sweating threshold, and sweating sensitivity. The method developed includes covering the skin with vaseline impregnated with dye to increase the sweat/skin contrast; time-lapse slide photography; and computer-assisted data analysis of the slide images. The report provides results of experiments using the method, demonstrating its reliability and reproducibility.

One polymeric material that will degrade rapidly in the environment is polycaprolactone (PCL). In the search for degradable materials for use in garbage bags, PCL/natural rubber (NR) blends have been investigated but found to have poor mechanical properties. As part of a study to examine whether gamma irradiation would improve the mechanical properties, the effect of gamma radiation exposure on some PCL/NR blends was studied using direct exposure probe/mass spectrometry (DEP/MS) and pyrolysis gas chromatography/mass spectrometry (PGC/MS). The aim of the study was to determine if those two analytical methods could be used to monitor changes in the polymers that might result from exposure to gamma radiation. This memorandum summarizes the results of the DEP/MS and PGC/MS analyses of the effect of gamma radiation on the degradation products of NR, PCL, a 70/30 NR/PCL blend, and a 30/70 NR/PCL blend.

The introduction reviews the current law with respect to domestic abuse and notes its shortcomings, as revealed by consultations with victims, in such areas as custody and access, lawyers and prosecutors, in-court experiences, police attitudes, harassment, restraining orders, sentencing, and property issues. The first chapter identifies the types of conduct that should ground an entitlement to apply for a protection order. The second chapter identifies those persons who should be entitled to bring an application for a protection order. The third chapter addresses the nature of the remedies that should be created by legislation, including protection, property, and prevention remedies. The final chapter covers constitutional issues and barriers to placing remedies in the jurisdiction of provincial tribunals. The report concludes with a list of recommendations for reform.

Downy brome (Bromus tectorum L.) has spread throughout southwestern Saskatchewan over the last 15 years to become a serious weed in various crops, pasture, and rangeland. This report presents results of field trials conducted over three years to evaluate herbicides, rotations, and intensive grazing as management tools for controlling downy brome. The investigators evaluated 26 herbicides for downy brome control and crop tolerance in winter wheat, fall rye, fallow, alfalfa, and grass hayland. They tested the compounds in isolation, as tank mixes, and with various adjuvants. Minor use proposals were submitted for five of the herbicides evaluated. The tests included evaluation of growth, seed production, and soil seedbank of downy brome in various crop rotations, and assessment of the effect of intensive spring grazing with cattle in reducing downy brome seed production.

Equivalent beam modelling is used in preliminary ship design for longitudinal elastic stress and ultimate bending strength evaluation. Two equivalent beam modelling programs, CSC and ULTIMAT, have been written for elastic stress evaluation and cross sectional ultimate strength analysis respectively. They have been integrated by a graphical user interface into one program called EBMS (Equivalent Beam Modelling of Ship Structures). CSC is capable of calculating sectional constants and elastic stresses including warping and torsion characteristics, while ULTIMAT is able to provide the ultimate hogging and sagging bending moments. This report describes the overall structure of these programs, the assumptions used in their formulation, and the input data format and usage. It also makes some recommendations pertaining to further development of EBMS.

Echidna, a constraint logic programming shell

This paper describes the architecture of Echidna, a new type of constraint logic programming for model-based expert systems applications. Echidna improves on the limitations of existing expert systems shells by combining aspects of schema-based knowledge representations, constraint logic programming (CLP), and dataflow intelligent backtracking to produce a next-generation shell. Echidna builds on recent advances in CLP by integrating within the language a clausal reason maintenance system and object-oriented knowledge structures. The paper argues that next-generation expert systems will incorporate richer structured knowledge representations based on object-oriented programming principles and rely on more efficient constraint propagation and intelligent backtracking control structures. Echidna shows that these capabilities can be combined into a coherent reasoning system.

Le projet des écoles exemplaires est une analyse approfondie d'une sélection très diverse d'établissements secondaires dans l'ensemble du Canada. Il s'agit de l'étude nationale la plus vaste jamais entreprise au Canada. Elle constitue, dans le domaine de la recherche en éducation, un travail de collaboration qui ouvre de nouveaux horizons et qu'ont appuyé des groupes plus divers que pour n'importe quelle autre étude de ce type effectuée auparavant. Les thèmes précisément abordés sont les suivants : l'enseignement secondaire au Canada; les écoles modèles; ce qui compte pour réussir, ou l'instruction monnayable; comment définir les programmes scolaires; les élèves et l'aspect social; enseignement et professeurs; les relations avec un monde plus vaste; et, l'information et la responsabilité.

The Ecological roles of wildlife tree users in forest ecosystems

By Marlene M. Machmer and Christoph Steeger. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Research Branch, 1995. vi, 54 p. : Bibl. (Land management handbook / British Columbia. Ministry of Forests ; no. 35 ISSN 0229-1622) ISBN 0-7726-2418-6 MICROLOG 95-07548 (1 fiche)

This report synthesizes North American literature about the effect of wildlife tree users on invertebrate and vertebrate pest populations. The report describes the feeding habits of 92 species of British Columbia wildlife tree users, along with the forest pest species they prey on. The report also identifies the other ecological roles of the tree users by examining their trophic relationships, and discusses these roles in the context of forest management. The report arranges wildlife tree users into foraging guilds and reviews studies that investigate the effects of individual species or entire guilds on the abundance and distribution of forest pests. These effects are quantified, if possible, and anecdotal information is included for guilds where quantitative studies are lacking. This information is used to evaluate the potential capacity of specific wildlife tree users to regulate forest pests in a density-dependent manner.

This report summarizes the findings of a trial established in 1990 in northern Ontario to examine the practice of deep planting black spruce seedlings. The investigators studied the effects of three planting depths on the survival and growth of overwintered black spruce (Picea mariana (Mill.)BSP) at a site with deep, moist, fine loamy-clayey soil and a vegetation type V31/32 (black spruce-jack pine/tall shrub/feathermoss) that had been full-tree harvested and Bracke site prepared. The report includes data on fifth-year percent survival, total height, height increment, and diameter at ground level for seedling stock planted normally (0-5 centimeters deep), at medium depth (5-9 centimeters below root collar), and deep (9 centimeters or deeper below root collar).

The Effect of sea level rise on eelgrass distributions in Boundary Bay

Prepared for Fisheries & Oceans Canada, West Vancouver Laboratory ; by J.A. Stronach, D.S. Dunbar. Vancouver, BC : Seaconsult, 1992. ii, 19 p. : Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07720 (1 fiche)

Quantitative information on the effects of mean sea level variations on intertidal regions is required in light of their importance to coastal ecosystems. One of the areas most sensitive to sea level variations are the eelgrass beds in Boundary Bay near Vancouver. These plants (Zostera marina and Z. japonica) generally populate the outer limits of the intertidal region, requiring periods of both exposure and submergence over the tidal cycle. This report presents results of a study to determine the change in area in Boundary Bay that would be available for colonization by the two species of Zostera for expected values of mean sea level rise. The study employed coupled tidal models for Boundary Bay and the Strait of Georgia, using exposure duration as the single criterion for eelgrass occurrence.

The goal of this compilation of papers is to provide those responsible for making decisions about buildings with some tools to achieve cost-effective lighting, without compromising occupant health, comfort, satisfaction, and performance. The scope of the publication is limited to fluorescent lighting. The first paper reviews the new National Energy Codes which will place limits on the amount of power dedicated to lighting buildings. This paper also discusses other reasons and incentives to install energy efficient lighting. The second paper provides performance characteristics of commercially available energy efficient lighting products. The third presents a systems approach to choosing both compact fluorescent downlighting systems and general office four-foot fluorescent systems. The final paper discusses methods available to evaluate the quality of indoor lighting. The appendices contain contact names and addresses for further information.

This report presents results of a study of Yukon government executive management personnel which described and assessed their qualities of effective leadership according to a model that defines a person's skills on each of six roles: visionary, symbolizer, innovator, mobilizer, auditor, and ambassador. The methodology included questionnaire surveys of both superiors and subordinates. The questionnaires were coded and analyzed using the SPSSx statistical package. A seven-point scale was used to obtain a measurement of the attributes of executive leaders. The results indicate the model's ability to distinguish between the government's most and least effective superiors.

This report presents results of tests conducted on a single masonry fireplace retrofitted with glass doors. The first series of tests examined the effect of the doors on fireplace spillage, and the second examined the effect of the doors on fireplace temperatures. For the first series of tests, the investigators constructed a chamber around the fireplace, designed to maintain a constant level of depressurization so that house depressurization could be simulated. They monitored fireplace spillage by measuring carbon monoxide concentration in air exhausted from the spillage chamber. In the second series, temperatures were measured on both the interior and exterior of the fireplace, and the influence of the glass doors was altered for each test by adjusting the leakiness, leak location, or length of time the doors were open.

The investigators treated the plants by placing them in a line and moving the spray nozzle above the plants along the plant line. The spray solutions contained dye for easy checking of droplet deposition using Kromekote cards. Glyphosate efficiency was measured not only as foliar browning but also as root kill, so that the results presented will be more applicable to field conditions. Recent attempts to develop expert systems for music composition have centered mainly around the rule-based approach. This paper argues that such an approach is frequently inefficient due to a passive use of constraints and a reliance on chronological backtracking as the control method. Conversely, an active use of constraints through consistency techniques results in less backtracking and thus a more efficient generation of compositions. The paper illustrates how the rules of first species counterpoint have a natural formulation as local constraints, and thus the problem of generating contrapuntal music can be represented as a constraint satisfaction problem. An efficiency comparison of four algorithms for generating compositions is presented which compares conventional tree search procedures to tree searching procedures that utilize consistency techniques.

The aging of the Canadian population, coupled with other demographic trends such as large-scale entry of women into the workforce, has led to an increase in the numbers of working people (largely women) who are caring for elderly relatives. The struggle to balance work with a commitment to eldercare has important implications for employee productivity, and employers who respond positively and proactively are addressing fundamental changes in the nature of the workplace in order to enhance their competitiveness. This paper reviews the demographic and social changes leading to an increase in eldercare in Manitoba and provides suggestions that employers may utilize to the mutual advantage of employer and employee in the workplace. These include development of policies that support a family-friendly work environment and that assist the eldercaring employee. The appendix contains sample eldercare policies of some Canadian companies.

Research which relies on survey methodology provides some information about the prevalence of various evaluation strategies, but offers little detail about the actual practice of evaluating student performance. This paper takes the view that an ethnographic approach is necessary to uncover the assumptions and implicit frames of reference which guide teachers' judgmental processes in evaluating students. The study method consisted of coding the content of report cards using a comprehensive classification scheme, and carrying out a content analysis of the cards in two stages. The results demonstrate the range of teachers' reporting styles concerning what areas of student performance they chose to emphasize, as well as the extent to which teachers could benefit from more training in qualitative methods rather than methods associated with measurement theory.

Evaluating the aero-hydrodynamic performance of the Mark 1 propulsion system for the DREA static test rig

By S.A. Sjolander. Ottawa : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1993. vi, 94 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; DREA CR/93/454) MICROLOG 95-07943 (2 fiche)

This report describes analyses carried out in connection with the propulsion system for the Static Test Rig, a submarine hydrodynamic test facility developed for use in a 9x9-meter wind tunnel. The report estimates drive power requirements for both the current Mark I propeller and a possible Mark II version. The report also makes a preliminary assessment of the effects of compressibility on propeller thrust and torque measurements. Finally, the report assesses the measurements obtained with the Mark I propeller and explains the uncertainties applicable to the measured thrust coefficients, off-axis force coefficients, and moment coefficients. L'Évaluation économique des modes d'hébergement pour les personnes âgées en perte d'autonomie : recension des méthodes et des résultats

Par Sylvie Rheault. Ministère de la santé et des services sociaux ; 22) ISBN 2-550-09585-5 MICROLOG 95-07984 (2 fiche)

Cette recension porte principalement sur les évaluations économiques et les variables de coûts considérées. Dans les cas où les évaluations économiques ont abordé la dimension de la qualité de vie des bénéficiaires ou de l'amélioration de l'état de santé, nous en ferons mention. Dans un premier temps, nous verrons l'utilité de l'analyse économique pour une prise de décision en matière d'affectation et de distribution des ressources. Pour obtenir une évaluation des coûts dans le domaine plus spécifique de l'hébergement des personnes âgées en perte d'autonomie, nous présenterons, en deuxième partie, les critères nécessaires pour mener à bien cet exercice. Enfin, nous présenterons, en dernière partie, une synthèse des études effectuées sur les coûts des modes d'hébergement pour les personnes âgées en perte d'autonomie. Pour en faciliter l'analyse, nous distinguerons les analyses avantage-coût, consistant le plus souvent à comparer deux groupes à domicile, les analyses coût-efficacité et enfin, les recherches, peu nombreuses par ailleurs, qui comparent systématiquement les coûts de divers modes d'hébergement. Elimination of chlorine compounds in the exhaust of a rocket is a desirable goal for reducing exhaust toxicity, corrosiveness, and compounds that cause secondary smoke. This paper describes investigations of chlorine-free rocket propellants based on an ammonium nitrate oxidizer and a glycidyl azide polymer. Research results are presented on exhaust gas composition as determined from thermochemical equilibrium calculations, emission spectroscopy, and gas sampling; and particulate composition and optical properties of exhaust smoke as determined through smoke chamber measurements, smoke classification, and detection range calculations. This report presents results of a survey of potential major consumers of natural gas in New Brunswick, conducted with the intention to estimate the costs of, and potential savings from, the conversion to natural gas from the consumers' present fuels and to estimate the total potential market for natural gas along certain hypothetical pipeline routes. The list of consumers surveyed included pulp and paper mills, mines, mineral producers, food and beverage firms, hospitals, universities, military bases, and other institutions with boilers or heating plants with thermal ratings over 200 thermhours. Information on fuel conversion was obtained from equipment manufacturers, and preliminary cost estimates for equipment conversions and pipeline installations are presented for 32 consumers around the province. The report includes financial analyses of the economic viability of the conversions. AP CO EN PR SC

The Canada-New Brunswick Cooperation Agreement on Travel Generators, signed in July 1992, was concluded in order to develop and broaden the tourism potential of New Brunswick. This document evaluates the degree to which the Agreement's objectives have been met, the impact and effects of the Agreement, and the effectiveness and efficiency of its implementation. Five specific tourism projects were evaluated: the New Brunswick Botanical Garden in St-Jacques, the Carrefour de la Mer in Caraquet, the Centre de plein air Vieux Moulin in St-Quentin, the Pays de la Sagouine in Bouctouche, and the Bi-Capitol Theatre in Saint John. Evaluation methods included examination of existing data on the five projects, interviews with project promoters, site visits, and meetings with community stakeholders. Results presented include costs and estimated economic impacts associated with each project. AP CA CO PR SS

An Evaluation of the Canada/Nova Scotia Cooperation Agreement for Forestry Development, 1989-91

The consultants evaluated the Canada-Nova Scotia Cooperation Agreement for Forestry Development in two phases. They used the logical framework approach to dissect each subprogram of the Agreement into distinct components and to indicate the linkages between these components as well as the external factors affecting them. This approach yielded indicators of success which indicate what was expected to be achieved at each subprogram level. The consultants then analyzed 16 themes, and the report reviews the findings for each theme. The themes included achievement of objectives; Agreement rationale; administrative costs; monitoring and inspection; landowner participation; sub-program delivery; communications; calls for proposals; research strategy; committees; the Agreement's timeframe; adequacy of forest management planning tools; forest management and environmental standards; and economic impacts. The report concludes with recommendations regarding the Agreement.

The introduction presents background information and a description of the Agreement, including its mandate, objectives, program elements, and organization. The evaluation addressed questions specific to program and subprogram elements as well as Agreement-level questions. Goals evaluated include achievement of a specified annual allowable cut, entering into cooperative arrangements to share in sustainable forest development, creation of private sector opportunities, and informing the public about forest management. The evaluation also assessed the effects of the Agreement on the provincial economy. The document also includes recommendations on improving implementation of the Agreement, benefit/cost analyses, and an assessment of the model used to calculate the annual allowable cut.

Cette étude macroéconomique répond à deux questions. Le discours officiel sur la crise des finances publiques dégageant une impression générale d'appauvrissement, il importe de savoir si, comme société, on s'enrichit ou on s'appauvrit. De plus, ce discours répète comme une idée-force qu'il faut couper dans les dépenses de l'État, et des décisions sont prises en ce sens. La question se pose alors de savoir quel déficit budgétaire est acceptable et comment ramener le déficit des dépenses à un niveau acceptable.

Exterior insulation finish systems : laboratory evaluation of materials and joints subjected to artificial conditioning : research report

By Lawrence Gibson. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Housing Innovation Division, 1995. 66 p. : ill. MICROLOG 95-07860 (1 fiche)

This report outlines testing conducted on exterior insulation finish system joints to evaluate bond strength and water resistance of a number of different joint designs when exposed to accelerated aging conditions and simulated joint movement. The investigators also tested the exterior insulation finish system lamina to evaluate its water vapor permeance, thermal coefficient of expansion, and dry shrinkage. A number of major suppliers submitted materials for testing which were felt to be representative of good quality exterior insulation. Qualified tradespeople laid up the test samples in accordance with manufacturer specifications, and all samples were cured 28 days before testing or subjected to a combination of drying cycles with exposure to ultraviolet light and wetting using simulated rain. Results presented include bond strength before and after aging, elongation, ultimate strength, and failure mode.

For several years there have been increasing efforts to have teachers expand and diversify their evaluation practices and consider evaluation as an integral part of the teaching/learning process. This investigation seeks to determine whether these efforts have had any effect, what changes teachers have made in evaluation practices, and what factors have influenced them to make these changes or to continue traditional practices. It summarizes findings and discusses implications of a series of interviews with 22 teachers of senior division physics in Ontario who were asked to describe their current evaluation practices, indicate any changes made in the last three years, and reveal what influenced their decisions. They were also asked to provide their views about the purposes of evaluation, the role of the secondary school, their role as physics teachers, and what makes their job enjoyable and/or difficult.

Edmonton : Premier's Council in Support of Alberta Families, 1995. ii, 72 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7732-1258 MICROLOG 95-08154 (1 fiche)

This report provides an overview of the status of family financial security in Alberta as well as an examination of some of the taxation issues that have been brought forward in public consultations. It examines changes in the characteristics of Alberta families, the Alberta economy, and the Alberta work force, and how these changes affect family income; summarizes data on family income and its sources; discusses factors influencing family economic security such as number of earners, education, age and experience, family structure, and the need to provide child support; and reviews changes in family income patterns. Finally, the report examines benefit programs and tax policies to determine whether the policies are fair to families of different types, and to consider whether tax and benefit policies may have unintended negative effects on families. Options to address these issues are noted and recommendations for action are proposed.

The interventions they provide, and their methods of evaluation, are consistent with that analysis. This document looks at the topic of feminist-based interventions for battering men and offers a brief explanation of feminist findings and formulations.

An FFT-based radiation boundary condition for the parabolic equation

By M. Elizabeth Mayfield. Victoria : Dept. of National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Pacific, 1994. 17 p. : ill., Bibl. (Contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Pacific ; 94-147)
MICROLOG 95-07500 (1 fiche)

The parabolic equation model has been used very successfully to compute approximate solutions to the Helmholtz equation for sound propagation problems. Of particular interest are the external boundary conditions associated with this equation; using an impedance condition as developed by Papadakis (1982) involves evaluating an expression containing an inner integral. A promising method for evaluating this integral uses fast Fourier transforms (FFT). This paper describes some modifications to the FFT-based approach that allows this technique to be incorporated into existing parabolic equation codes that are solved by finite difference methods. In particular, the paper applies a procedure developed previously for handling similar integrals that occur in the wavenumber integration code SAFARI. The paper includes numerical results of two typical examples for sound propagation over a uniform liquid half-space. The appendix contains computer program listings.

Fleet vehicles : special operating agency charter

Manitoba. Fleet Vehicles Agency. Winnipeg : The Agency, 1992. 21 p.

MICROLOG 95-08096 (1 fiche)

In 1990 a review of the Fleet Vehicle Branch was done to measure the Branch's effectiveness. The report recommended related options be explored to facilitate operation of the fleet at its most economic level. The Branch felt the best option would be to convert the Branch into a Special Operating Agency. In 1991, the Branch was directed by Treasury Board to study the feasibility of becoming a Special Operating Agency and to return to Treasury Board with a Charter, Business Plan, Implementation Plan and List of Delegated Authorities. This report provides the Charter. It presents the mission and objectives, a description of its services, markets and geographic coverage; the accountability of various Ministry heads and to clients; a description of planning and reporting objectives, financial principles and resources, information on human resources, and the implementation of the Special Operating Agency. Finally, it concludes with a blank copy of the Operating Charter Agreement.

Forest buffer zone management along watercourses : New Brunswick case studies

By Helmut H. Krause and Richard Barry. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1995. 25 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl.

MICROLOG 95-07502 (1 fiche)

New Brunswick's Clean Water Act requires 75-meter-wide buffer zones along banks of all watercourses in municipal water supply areas. These regulations are new and need to be tested. This report port presents case studies from a project which sought improvements in the underlying rationale for buffer zone width and management. The case studies were used to seek answers to two questions crucial to the project: whether timber harvesting could be carried out within buffers without detriment to water quality, and whether the remaining forests responded in a manner favorable to water-course protection and future yield. The case study sites were chosen to represent different ecoregions of the province. Information in the case study reports includes terrain and forest condition, harvesting conducted, buffers established, and water quality. The report ends with a discussion of significant factors revealed by the case studies, such as wind hazard.

The primary tool employed to estimate economic timber supply for six regions of Canada in the National Timber Supply Study is a simulation model known as PRTSM (Price Responsive Timber Supply Model). PRTSM utilizes forest inventory data, delivered wood costs, roundwood values, and exogenous price projections to produce estimates of the economically available supply of roundwood. This report presents the initial results of applying PRTSM to the Atlantic region. It includes description of the use of forestry inventory data to create a picture of available stocks and the use of PRTSM methodology on analysis units within the region. Initial results presented include an annual supply curve for the 1990-95 period.

The Fraser River system produces more salmon than any other single river system in the world, and has played a major role in the history and development of British Columbia through its use for irrigation, water supply, transportation, recreation, and power production. This report focuses on the habitat issues that affect the salmon resource of the Fraser watershed. It reviews the Fraser fisheries resource, with data on production and economic value and information on programs for salmon management and stock rebuilding; the Fraser salmon habitat resource, outlining salmon production, present status, and future trends for each sub-basin of the Fraser watershed; and present and future habitat planning initiatives.

From mechanics to acoustics : modelling polymer properties

By E.L. Taylor and J.P. Szabo. Dartmouth, NS : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1995. iii, 26 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA technical memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; 95/211) MICROLOG 95-07954 (1 fiche)

This study explores the relationships between experimental dynamic mechanical data and experimental acoustic data for three polymeric materials: polyvinyl chloride (PVC), plasticized PVC, and nitrile rubber. The investigators wrote two algorithms: a forward algorithm to convert dynamic mechanical data to acoustic data, and a reverse algorithm to extract acoustic material properties such as sound speeds and attenuation coefficients from experimental acoustic data. Testing of the forward algorithm was complicated by the lack of independent data on the polymers' complex Poisson ratio, which is required as an input to the model. The sound speeds and attenuation coefficients in the 10-100 kilohertz range were determined for two elastomeric materials. The extraction algorithm used an iterative approach to find the optimum fit between simulation and experiment while constraining the polymer to a mechanical relaxation model.

Fuel cells are considered major candidates as power sources for electric vehicles, as they convert the chemical energy of an oxidant and a fuel direct-

This report assesses the state of the art of fuel cell technologies with an emphasis on systems with potential for mobile application. The investigators used bench tests and computer simulation to analyze the capabilities of fuel cell systems as power sources for electric vehicles in both stand-alone and hybrid configurations. The report also assesses storage technologies and reviews some vehicle demonstration and development projects under way.

The Garrison Common North study area is bounded by Dufferin, Queen, and Bathurst streets north of the Gardiner Expressway in Toronto. This plan proposes relocation of the Newmarket-Galt rail corridor southwesterly to an abandoned right-of-way, which would not only achieve significant transportation network improvements but also create the opportunity to reintegrate an inaccessible, under-tilized, and partially vacant area with the rest of the city to the north. Aspects of the plan include enhancement and completion of the existing north-south public open space system; introduction of a variety of land uses and densities; protection of existing industries; and provision of a range of community services and facilities concurrent with residential development. The plan also includes an alternative and less costly proposal that does not involve relocation of the rail corridor. The shortcomings of the latter proposal are noted.

Disease impact estimation quantifies a health problem in terms of human costs (mortality and morbidity) and economic costs (health care costs, losses to productivity and lifetime earnings). In this report, a disease impact estimation analysis is used to produce a picture of the impact of smoking on the Toronto city population. The report analyzes the mortality, potential years of life lost, and economic costs theoretically attributable to active smoking among Toronto residents. The relative savings in terms of human lives and economic costs are explored in this analysis by using hypothetical scenarios in which the prevalence rate of smoking could be reduced by specified percentages compared to existing rates. The analytical methodology employed the SAMMEC (Smoking-Attributable Mortality, Morbidity, and Economic Costs) software developed by the US Dept of Health and Human Services.

Heap leaching grade and metallurgical evaluation of White Channel gravels : final report

For Northern Affairs Program, Dept. of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mississauga, ON : Witteck Development Inc., 1987. 74 p. : ill. MICROLOG 95-07837 (1 fiche)

The White Channel gravels in the Yukon Territory have been found to contain low gold values (average 0.08 grams per tonne). The cyanide heap leaching process is a potential method of extracting the gold contained in this deposit. This report summarizes head grade and preconcentration testwork done on samples of White Channel gravel, and assesses the amenability of the gravel to cyanide heap leaching. The report includes results of bottle rolls and column tests with cyanide, metallurgical evaluations, gold and gangue mineralogy, cyanide consumption, mass balance and screen analyses, and distribution of gold particles in the samples. Hearing standards for Canadian Coast Guard seagoing personnel : a preliminary investigation

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada ; prepared by Advanced Systems Engineering: Ergonomics and Human Factors Group, and Stanley E. Forshaw. Vancouver, BC : BCRI, 1995. xiv, 65 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07646 (1 fiche)

As part of an effort to review medical requirements for the Canadian Coast Guard, this report examines hearing standards for seagoing personnel. The focus is on operational demands, and the report includes a review of internationally relevant hearing standards and of literature on hearing aids, and development of a methodology for identifying operationally based auditory requirements. The methodology is designed to ensure that the results of clinical tests can be related to specific shipboard hearing requirements. The report also provides background information on clinical tests for hearing loss and on pertinent psychophysical issues. The report ends with recommendations for improving existing Coast Guard hearing standards, covering those who have fallen below the current Class 1 hearing level subsequent to enlistment, as well as approaches for speech discrimination testing in noise for those with hearing impairment. Hierarchical arc consistency for disjoint real intervals in constraint logic programming

By Greg Sidebottom and William S. Havens. Burnaby, BC : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1992. 32 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report / Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; CSS-IS TR 92-16) MICROLOG 95-07604 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This paper describes an approach to numeric constraint processing implemented in Echidna, a new constraint logic programming (CLP) language. Echidna uses consistency algorithms which can actively process a wider variety of numeric constraints than most other CLP systems, including constraints containing some common nonlinear functions. A unique feature of Echidna is that it implements domains for real-valued variables with hierarchical data structures and exploits this structure using a hierarchical arc consistency algorithm specialized for numeric constraints. This gives Echidna two advantages over other systems: the union of disjoint intervals can be represented directly, and the hierarchical structure facilitates varying the precision of constraint processing. Consequently, it is possible to implement more effective constraint processing algorithms which avoid unnecessary detailed domain analysis.

Highway 104 between Masstown and Thomson Station, Nova Scotia, is to be upgraded due to safety concerns and the importance of the highway to the provincial economy. This document is intended to solicit the best overall proposal for the development, financing, design, construction, maintenance, and operation of the upgraded highway. The document describes the specifications and requirements for the development, design, and construction of the highway, the matters to be included in the proposal, operations and maintenance requirements, financing arrangements, environmental issues, legislation and legal matters, and communications and marketing of the project. The appendices include road performance specifications, a copy of the Highway 104 Western Alignment Act, contract provisions, and a detailed report on traffic volume and toll revenue forecasts for the highway. This document is intended as a means of offering support to Quebec schools wishing to develop guidelines for dealing with HIV and AIDS. The first part of the document considers a number of issues that must be addressed before a school proceeds to develop those guidelines. These issues include resistance to dealing with sexual issues from parents or community groups; the principles that should be followed to encourage attitudes of respect and empathy for HIV/AIDS victims; relevant laws and legal documents; contributions from parents and health care agencies in developing the guidelines; provision of HIV/AIDS information; which measures should be adopted to ensure a healthy environment; and assignation of responsibilities for guideline development. The second part outlines the guideline development process, including forming a committee, studying relevant information, consultation with affected groups, and adoption and updating of the guidelines. This report describes a research project studying evacuation drills in mid-rise apartment buildings with mixed abilities occupants. The researchers collected real-time data on time and movement during evacuation drills in four buildings in four different cities, reflecting provincial variations in fire safety procedures. During each drill, data were gathered on the following: time to respond, degree of understanding of voice communication instructions, direction of movement, time for all occupants to reach a safe area, overall evacuation behavior, and time to totally evacuate the building. Questionnaires distributed after each drill asked occupants whether they had heard the alarm and public address system messages, and also asked them to list the chronology of their actions and describe their evacuation movements. The report includes recommendations on improving evacuation of buildings.

Construction of the Bennett Dam in British Columbia altered natural fluctuations of downstream flows in the Peace River in Alberta, with major implications for the ecosystem of the Peace-Athabasca Delta. In later years, downstream weirs were constructed to restore the water level regime in the Delta. This report presents the results of a modelling exercise undertaken in an attempt to assess the effect of the weirs and the dam on the Delta water levels during 1985-90, at which time Lake Athabasca water levels were low and it was not clear whether the weirs were functioning properly or if the low water levels were caused by low flows coming from the upper Peace and Athabasca river basins. The methodology uses a one-dimensional hydrodynamic model, suitably modified and calibrated. The appendices include numerous plots of water levels indicating the effects of the weirs and dam on natural conditions.

The Fraser River Action Plan is developing plans for environmentally sustainable salmon production. Planning is based on 15 habitat management areas within the Fraser River watershed. This report examines seven streams within the West Road Habitat Management Area, with the goal of expressing the habitat sensitivity of the salmon streams through various indices calculated from the hydrologic, water use, and land use data collected for the streams. The report reviews the physiography and climate of the Area, describes the flow characteristics of the salmon streams, assesses the impacts of forest harvesting and agriculture on the streams, calculates water demand from water license data, and determines the stream sensitivity indices. The report concludes with technical and management recommendations, including development of water management plans for the streams that are most affected by human activity. BC CA CF FI LS ND NR SC

Ice management in Lac St. Pierre

For Transportation Development Centre, Policy & Coordination, Transport Canada ; by Donald Carter, Consultants. Ste Foy, PQ : The Consultants, 1995. xvi, 152 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07650 (2 fiche)

This report analyzes the ice cover evolution in the presence of the new 2.3-meter ice boom deployed in Lac St-Pierre, north of the St Lawrence navigation channel near Yamachiche. The report presents an analysis of the observations during critical periods of the ice cover formation and stabilization, and gives as far as possible an up-to-date version of the current understanding of the ice forces on a boom structure. These forces are generated by the cumulative effects of the ice jam's own weight and the wind and flow shear, which were experimentally determined. The calculated ice forces are compared to measured loads. The report also analyzes the propagation of ship waves in shallow ice-covered water, showing the attenuation of short-period waves compared to long-period waves and the effects on ice cover of the superimposition of draw-up and draw-down generated by some ships in the navigation channel. CA ND PR QU SC

Identification of potential environmental and health concerns of soil remediation technologies : technical report

By P.R. Kendall. Toronto : Toronto Dept. of Public Health, Environmental Protection Office, 1991. 240 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-08017 (4 fiche)

The purpose of this study is to identify the potential environmental and health concerns associated with various soil remediation technologies, with a focus on those developed and used in North America and on Canadian national and local remediation projects. Fifteen criteria addressed the environmental and health concerns with the associated performance of the technology by examining destruction and removal efficiencies, completion time, and process emissions. Long-term effectiveness was indicated by residue mobility and toxicity. Other hazards evaluated included fire and explosion hazard, transport of hazardous materials, and worker/community exposures. The technologies examined include physical methods such as solidification, steam stripping, solvent extraction, and soil washing; chemical methods such as on-site dechlorination; biological methods including landfarming; and thermal methods (incineration, in-situ vitrification). Includes an index to the technologies evaluated. EV HE MU NR ON SC

L'impact du mariage mixte sur la femme francophone et sa famille : leur situation dans les milieux majoritaires et minoritaires

Final report submitted to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada ; principal investigator : Monica Heller, research assistant : Laurette Lévy. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Centre de recherches en éducation franco-ontarienne, 1990. 116 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07622 MICROLOG 95-07581 (2 fiche)

This study attempts to understand the relationship between individuals (francophone women in this case) and the broader structure of a language boundary by examining the ways in which the experience of a woman in an ethnically mixed marriage articulates her experience of social conditions. The study is based on interviews with 28 francophone women married to anglophone men in three major urban Ontario centers. The study attempts to grasp the subjects' representations of the reality of being part of a linguistically mixed marriage, and to explain the extent to which those representations vary in terms of the various circumstances of their lives. The women studied contribute to the construction of ideologies of ethnic relations and norms of interethnic interaction. ON OR PR SA SS

This book summarizes the findings of a major research project undertaken to investigate and analyze the reasons for South Africa's poor manufacturing performance over the past 20 years. The authors first review South Africa's manufacturing performance in terms of growth, exports, output, investment, and productivity. They then discuss objectives of an industrial strategy (creating employment, increasing investment, raising productivity, improving trade performance) and strategies appropriate for South Africa such as specialization, targeting key capabilities, and using empowerment to promote growth. The authors also present a detailed examination of key aspects of South African industry such as market and ownership structures, human resource development, and workplace organization. The book concludes with policy proposals for ensuring technological advance in South African industry, including promotion of the industry's technological capabilities.

This report reviews sources and levels of indoor air pollutants and identifies concerns associated with human exposure to these substances. It includes descriptions of sources from human activity, equipment, building components, furnishings, and supplies, and outdoor air; examination of time-activity patterns of human exposure, microenvironment characteristics, and populations at risk; evaluates indoor air quality guidelines and legislation; and reviews the health effects for 14 contaminants and contaminant groups including carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, formaldehyde, nitrogen dioxide, ozone, particulates, volatile organics, and pest control products. The report then outlines measures for improving indoor air quality, including source control, ventilation, air cleaning, administrative control, building operation and maintenance, and improved building design. The report ends with recommendations addressing indoor air quality.

Most panel data sets of firms actually available are incomplete for reasons such as mergers, bankruptcies, and incomplete surveys. This paper presents a method for the estimation of cost and input demand functions with incomplete panel data. The method jointly considers the cost-input demand system and a probit selection model of exit from the sample before the end of the period under study. Entry into the sample is not explicitly modelled as exit, but is considered as exogenous. To take account of the panel aspect of the data, both the cost and selection models include random firm-specific effects, with some restrictions on the random variables in order to simplify the analysis. The investigators applied the method to an incomplete panel of Ontario trucking firms from 1981 to 1988, and present the results. They also show how the specification of the cost function affects the results.

This report describes a new type of reasoning engine for model-based expert system applications based on constraint logic programming (CLP), intelligent backtracking (IB), and reason maintenance. The reasoning engine has been implemented as a new CLP language called Echidna. After outlining related research in logic programming, the report provides an architectural overview of the Echidna language and an example schema taken from a model-based diagnosis application. The report then describes some problems of IB in logic programming and CLP languages and the additional problems introduced by structured language representations. These problems are used to motivate the subsequent IB methodology. Later sections of the report define the dataflow of events among unified Horn clauses and objects, from which development of the IB scheme is developed. The report concludes with a status report on the Echidna CLP language and future research plans.

Knowledge discovery facilitates querying of database knowledge and intelligent query answering in database systems. This paper examines the application of discovered knowledge, concept hierarchies, and knowledge discovery tools for intelligent query answering in database systems. The authors construct a knowledge-rich data model to incorporate discovered knowledge and knowledge discovery tools. They classify queries into data queries and knowledge queries, both types being able to be answered directly by simple retrieval or intelligently by analyzing the intent of query and providing generalized, neighborhood, or associated information using stored or discovered knowledge. The paper also develops techniques for intelligent query answering using discovered knowledge and/or knowledge discovery tools, which include generalization, data summarization, concept clustering, rule discovery, and deduction.

This paper modifies the traditional one-way parabolic equation formulation for range-dependent layered acoustic media to include effects associated with interfaces internal to the computational grid. Both first- and second-order approximations are derived which effectively translate the effects of internal boundary conditions onto nearby grid points. The approximations are based on a procedure in which auxiliary field variables are defined above and below the interface. Consideration of second-order conditions also allows sloping internal interfaces to be accommodated. The paper presents numerical results obtained for standard test cases in order to demonstrate the application of the analysis.

Dans l'introduction de ce rapport, nous situons la réflexion dans le contexte de la démarche qui a mené à l'adoption de la Loi sur les jeunes contrevenants et qui a présidé à la mise sur pied de services que requerrait son application. Dans le premier, nous faisons part d'un certain nombre de réflexions qui ont orienté nos délibérations. Chacun des chapitres qui suivent est consacré à une question précise. Ainsi le second chapitre porte sur la prévention de la délinquance. Dans le troisième chapitre, nous abordons divers aspects de l'intervention policière. Le quatrième chapitre est consacré au Programme de mesures de rechange. Diverses facettes de l'intervention judiciaire sont examinées dans le cinquième chapitre. Le sixième chapitre couvre un ensemble de questions qui ont trait aux mesures qui peuvent être imposées par le tribunal ou utilisées à titre de mesures de rechange. Le septième chapitre groupe un ensemble de considérations diverses qui nous semblent de nature à favoriser une meilleure application de la loi. Dans le dernier chapitre, nous traitons de la Commission de protection des droits de la jeunesse.

Hawks Creek is a small tributary of the Fraser River with no record of spawning salmonids. The investigators examined this tributary from May to November 1990 for the presence of juvenile salmonids. This paper presents the results of that examination, showing the number and distribution of salmonids in the creek, areas occupied by juvenile chinook salmon, average residence time, and number and size of rainbow trout and mountain whitefish observed in the creek. The paper concludes with a discussion of physical and biological reasons for the use of small, clear, and nonnatal tributaries by juvenile salmonids.

This document provides an overview of the main economic issues in the Kluane region and the available economic data relevant to preparation of the Kluane Regional Plan. Where available, the document includes statistical data on the type and scope of economic activities in the region, such as trapping and construction, as well as demographic data. The document also identifies the opportunities and constraints in the various economic sectors, including tourism, mining, energy, agriculture, fisheries, and forestry. Resource conflicts among different user groups are noted, along with the economic goals of the region, external factors affecting the region, and tradeoffs involved in economic development. The document concludes by identifying gaps in data and areas of future research.

This report presents results from a study of sediment samples from Wheatley Harbour and Muddy Creek, located along the Lake Erie north shore. The site is known to have been contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls from industrial discharges. The main objectives of the study were to: describe the level of chemical contamination; assess the toxicity of whole sediments in laboratory bioassays; and determine the availability of sediment-bound organic contaminants to the forage fish Pimephales promelas. The report includes a description of the sample collection, analytical, and laboratory biological testing methods, as well as results of sediment characterization and test organism lethality and growth. The report also discusses relationships among biological endpoints, sediment properties, and provincial sediment quality guidelines, as well as relationships between chemical bioaccumulation in P. promelas and sediment properties.

This report outlines a procedure for rating the suitability of land for production of spring-seeded small grains and hardy oilseeds in Canada. The system was developed in response to concerns regarding the Canada Land Inventory soil capability ratings and uses an expert system approach based on accumulated experience and supporting research, with modifications from limited field testing. Use of the rating system requires information for each factor within the climate, soil, and landscape components of the system. The report describes these factors and how to calculate them, and includes sample calculations plus supplementary data in support of the rating system.

Leeway dynamic study, phase I : development and verification of a mathematical drift model for four-person liferafts

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy & Coordination, Transport Canada ; by Donald O. Hodgins, Raymond Y. Mak. Vancouver, BC : Seasconsult Marine Research Ltd., 1995. xv, 167 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07647 (2 fiche)

This paper presents a mathematical model to predict the motion of a four-person liferaft. The model is based on Newton's second law of dynamics and the kinematic drift equations using a tangent plane approximation to the earth surface. The model considers all forces produced by wind, surface current waves, gravity, and the earth's rotation. Wind tunnel tests on 1:4 scale models were used to determine aerodynamic drag and side force coefficients for Tular Corsair and Dunlop-Beaufort Seafarer liferafts. Model predictions were validated using drift and leeway data from field trials conducted off Newfoundland in 1992. The paper compares the model's reproduction of leeway factors and total drift for the two liferaft designs with the actual data, at wind speeds above and below 15 knots. The paper concludes with a recommendation regarding the use of the model with other search and rescue targets to obtain leeway factors.

Macrofauna, meiofauna, carbon and nitrogen in sediment samples from the Fraser River Estuary, Iona Island foreshore : final report

MICROLOG 95-07719 (1 fiche)

The largest single discharge of municipal sewage in British Columbia is at Iona Island. This discharge flowed out over intertidal sands and mudflats of Sturgeon Bank, and at low tide flowed through a dredged channel over 6 kilometers long to the Strait of Georgia. To reduce pollution from this discharge, effluent has been diverted to a deep outfall in the Strait since 1988, but excess flow will still spill into the shallow channel. Department of Fisheries and Oceans staff sampled Sturgeon Bank near the Iona surface discharge in 1992 to determine the changes in the bank habitats since the diversion was constructed. They compared benthic fauna and sediment characteristics with those found previous to the construction of the deep outfall. This report presents the results of the analyses of the post-diversion sediment samples.

Two dimensions of administrative change in contemporary democracies are at war with one another. On the one hand, the new public management argues that organizations should decentralize and empower lower-echelon employees. On the other hand, continuing fiscal pressures and the requirements of the global economy point to the need for better coordination. This paper looks mainly to the United States experience, in part because the competing forces are readily apparent there, but also because information was able to be secured from key decision makers on how they are dealing with the situation. Topics covered are: sources of incoherence; increasing demand for coordination and control; mechanism for control; some fundamental questions left unanswered; and, some lessons learned for Canada.

Dans ce document on décrit des catégories de matériel didactique, des critères d'approbation, des cotes, des exigences pédagogiques et exigences visant à l'élimination des stéréotypes discriminatoires, la structure de la liste, la durée de la période d'approbation, et droit d'auteur. Ensuite, la liste offre des renseignements sur chaque titre : éditeurs, éléments approuvés, pages, dimensions, reliure, orientation, programme, pratique, format, et stéréotypes. On fait la liste des titres pour des matières suivantes : éducation préscolaire, anglais-langue-seconde, art dramatique et plastiques, musique, enseignement moral et religieux catholique ou protestant, formation personnelle et sociale, français-langue-maternelle, classe d'accueil et classe de francisation, mathématique, sciences de la nature, et sciences humaines.

Ce document, qui s'inscrit dans le cadre de l'examen des sciences et de la technologie entrepris par Industrie Canada, traite des mécanismes et des pratiques d'évaluation des répercussions sociales et culturelles de la technologie. On y examine la gamme et la pertinence des mécanismes et des pratiques employés au Canada pour évaluer les questions sociales et culturelles, actuelles et émergentes, soulevées par la science et les nouvelles technologies. Il débouche sur la conclusion que, nonobstant les ressources considérables consacrées aux sciences et à la technologie et à leurs répercussions sociales et culturelles, tout n'est pas parfait dans ce domaine. Le document renferme une analyse des initiatives qui pourraient s'avérer nécessaires en vue de changer la situation.

A Medium-scale experimental study of the boiling liquid expanding vapour explosion (BLEVE)

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada ; by A.M. Birk, M.H. Cunningham. Kingston, ON : Queen's University, Dept. of Mechanical Engineering, 1994. xvi, 81 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-07645 (2 fiche)

This report describes the results and analysis of a series of medium-scale fire tests conducted to investigate the fire effects on pressure liquefied gas containers, specifically the boiling liquid expanding vapor explosion (BLEVE). The main goals of the tests were to develop means of predicting BLEVEs; to determine the effects of pressure release valve operation, tank wall thickness, and lading temperature on the occurrence of a BLEVE; and to qualify the fireball, projectile, and blast hazards from BLEVEs. The report discusses the internal tank and hazard test data, including a method for distinguishing between BLEVE and non-BLEVE failures based on tank wall temperature and thickness, liquid temperature, and fill level at failure. The report also suggests a preliminary method of determining BLEVE susceptibility.

Mercury in fish from rivers and lakes in southwestern Northwest Territories

This report presents and interprets data on mercury contamination in fish from the Slave and Hay rivers in Northwest Territories. The investigators selected three fish species (walleye, pike, and lake whitefish) for sampling because of their importance to local residents for subsistence fishing. They determined total mercury concentrations in the samples, with methylmercury concentrations determined in a random subset. The results presented include the relationship between mercury concentration and fish age, differences in this relationship among sampling location and fish species, mercury concentration according to species, variability in mercury concentrations between sampling sites, and relationships (if any) between the regional pattern of mercury contamination and possible anthropogenic point sources of mercury.

The Parlyb Creek-Buffalo Lake Water Management Project includes a proposed lake stabilization component that involves raising the current level of the lake. The project has caused concern regarding the elevation of mercury in fish tissue which could occur if the lake level is raised. To allow future evaluation of the impact of the project on the aquatic system, investigators collected baseline data on mercury levels in fish muscle tissue in The Narrows in Parlyb Creek-Buffalo Lake. This report presents the results of that investigation, and includes background information on mercury accumulation in fish, a description of the sampling and analytical methods employed, and data on mercury levels in northern pike, white sucker, and longnose sucker.

This report describes recent work completed to extend the capabilities of REFINE, including the program modifications which enable the refinement of additional element types such as the curved beam element and the axisymmetric shell, the introduction of appropriate cubic multi-point constraint equations for refinement of stiffened or unstiffened panels, improved refinement of substructured models, introduction of a restart capability suitable for either substructured or unstructured finite element models, and additional improvements in the superelement program. The report ends with a description of miscellaneous changes determined to be desirable in recent applications of the program.

This report describes modifications and enhancements made to the Titan radar display processor in order to implement a modular radar interface. It outlines two design studies undertaken with a view to substantially reducing the cost of the existing processor. These studies included an overview of alternative computer hosts for the product and an application specific integrated circuit (ASIC) design study that examined the possibility of replacing a significant portion of the existing electronics with a custom ASIC. The report also analyzes design tradeoffs and describes the implemented circuit modifications and software modifications undertaken to increase the flexibility of the pre-existing product. These modifications and enhancements included adding a software-controllable video gain and offset feature, adding a ship's gyro input to the existing display processor, and providing a Windows NT driver.

In recent years, many projects related to marine radar have required the exchange of data between the data and the application; in addition, initiatives in marine operation automation and reduced manning have led to development and introduction of integrated bridge systems and electronic chart display information systems. Both research and commercial projects require a radar interface. These are currently designed and imbedded in each project. It would be desirable to have a universal, programmable, and platform independent radar interface and scan-converter processor. This report defines the requirements for such an interface module, examines the feasibility of its development, and addresses its suitability. The report presents a concept design including digital video capture/scan, video driver, command processing, image formatting, data acquisition, and suitable data exchange and communication devices.

Monolithic microwave integrated circuits (MMIC) technology enhances the reliability and reduces the cost and size of microwave circuits. The Microwave Landing System (MLS) has been selected as an application of MMIC technology. This document provides a functional requirements specification and a cost benefit analysis of the MLS phase array ground antenna and airborne receiver radio-frequency subsystem. The purpose of the study is to demonstrate the comparative reliability and environmental performance of MMIC-based solutions and the associated hybrid or discrete implementations. The cost benefit analysis treats each functional block separately (the phase locked cavity oscillator, phase shifter/distributed amplifier, video detector circuitry, and frequency synthesizer). For the airborne case, cost analyses are performed on several potential solutions involving combinations of off-the-shelf and custom MMICs.

Influenza A and B viruses are currently diagnosed in respiratory secretions either by direct immunofluorescence (DIF) or by DIF coupled with cell culture techniques. This study examines whether nested polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and reverse transcriptase reactions offer a viable alternative to detecting and typing these viruses. The experimental materials included a representative selection of coded clinical specimens of influenza A and B isolates as well as clinical isolates identified as containing respiratory syncytial virus, adenovirus, and parainfluenza virus. Culture negative specimens were employed as controls. This study report presents the results of the experiments and discusses factors affecting diagnostic sensitivity. The report also briefly reviews other ways of directly detecting nucleic acids and describes a fast and simple way of detecting PCR products.

The study focuses on the accommodation of six typical households: a retired woman, a single adult using home as a workspace, a single at-home parent and one child, two adults not living conjugally, a single working parent and two children, and two working parents and two children. The study develops prototypical new unit and common space designs which are intended to illustrate a generic approach to residential design rather than definitive architectural solutions. The study also discusses cost and building code considerations.

New directions for lotteries and gaming : report and recommendations

Alberta. Lottery Review Committee. Edmonton : The Committee, 1995. 68 p.
MICROLOG 95-08172 (1 fiche)

This report reviews the findings of the Alberta Lotteries Review Committee, charged with the task of consulting with Albertans on future directions for lotteries and gaming in the province. The Committee held 22 public meetings across the province and received over 18,500 written responses on seven key issues: what lotteries funding should be used for; whether there are better ways of allocating lottery revenues; improvement of accountability; the impact of video lottery terminals on community organizations; how casinos should operate; problem gambling; and whether lottery funding should support professional sports teams. The report also presents the Committee's overall positions and specific recommendations on each of those issues, based on the results of the public consultations and submissions.

New opportunities in new media : Saskatchewan's arts and cultural industries

Prepared by Donald Hamm ; for Saskatchewan Municipal Government ; in partnership with the Dept. of Canadian Heritage and Industry Canada ; with the participation of SaskFILM. Regina : Saskatchewan Municipal Government, 1994. 85 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-08047 (1 fiche)

The increasing availability of new computer technologies has led to creation of new media that combine traditional art forms with computer readable formats. This study was initiated to assess market trends and opportunities for these new media products in Saskatchewan. It reviews the evolving system of electronic networks and technologies including cable distribution, telephone networks, and computer networks such as Internet, CANARIE, and Culturenet. It then inventories the existing cultural industry market structure and Saskatchewan's cultural industries in the fields of film and video, sound recording, and publishing, and assesses those industries in terms of their present capabilities and future potential for creation of new media products. Finally, the study identifies market opportunities in production of new media in Saskatchewan and makes recommendations to address the problems related to on-going development of such products.

Nickel, copper and platinum group element mineralization in Keweenaw intrusive rocks : new targets in the Keweenaw of the Thunder Bay region, northwestern Ontario

By P.C. Lightfoot and M.J. Lavigne. Toronto : Ontario Geological Survey, 1995. ix, 32 p. : Bibl. (Ontario Geological Survey open file report / Ontario Geological Survey ; 5928 ISSN 0826-9580) ISBN 0-7778-4520-2

This report reviews results of an investigation of the Keweenaw intrusive and extrusive rocks in the region southwest of Thunder Bay, in the Nipigon Plate region, and in offshore areas of northwestern Lake Superior. The region is of interest as an exploration target for a giant nickel-copper-platinum group element (PGE)-rich magmatic sulfide deposit, as similarities exist between the northern margin of the Ontario Keweenaw Rift and the Noril'sk Region of the Siberian Trap. The report documents an important new intersection of nickel, copper, and PGE magmatic sulfide mineralization in a coarse-grained gabbro north of the Great Lakes nickel deposit. The report also highlights the significance of targets in dyke rocks of the Pigeon River, Arrow River, and Mount Mollie-Pine River dykes southwest of Thunder Bay.

This report describes a research project in which plots were designed and constructed at a Syncrude oil sand mine site to test the effect of thickness and quality of replaced soil over tailings sand on the performance of trees and shrubs. Treatments included three cap thicknesses (70, 50, and 30 centimeters) of replaced soil salvaged from an area rated as fair soil suitability for reclamation, as well as one 70-centimeter cap of replaced soil salvaged from an area of poor soil quality. Following plot construction, the investigators planted seedlings of four species: jack pine, white spruce, aspen, and dogwood. They collected baseline soil data and measured height on a random selection of permanently marked seedlings, then collected survival and growth data annually from 1991 to 1993. Results presented include seedling survival by growing season and species, effect of soil quality and thickness on survival and growth, and degree of invasion of weed species.

Performance of ventilation systems : demonstration of systems designed to a prescriptive standard with studies of the controls, noise, air flow and distribution

Submitted by Richard Lind in support of ventilation standards research. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, Housing Technology Group, 1993. 36 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07853 (1 fiche)

This study examines ventilation systems and control strategies in several electric baseboard heated houses in a maritime climate. In the study, ventilation systems were installed in five houses electrically heated without forced-air systems or combustion appliances; two of the systems were central exhaust only, two had balanced heat-recovery ventilators, and one was a central exhaust and central supply system with tempering by recirculated air. Measurements made in the study included airtightness, house pressure, ventilation flows, acoustics, electrical power, and ventilation distribution. The main objectives of the study were to demonstrate specific ventilation systems designed to a ventilation air flow of about half the Canadian Standards Association F326 capacity requirement; to demonstrate various control strategies; and to verify ventilation air distribution in houses with an exhaust-only ventilation strategy.

La Planification et l'évaluation de projets en prévention du crime

Évaluer un projet de prévention du crime, c'est apporter une information utile et rigoureuse relativement à son impact sur la criminalité. Le premier but de ce texte est de stimuler le développement de ce type de recherche. Dans le premier chapitre, nous proposons une définition de la prévention, suivie d'une classification et d'une théorie; le chapitre se termine par une énumération des mesures de prévention prometteuses dans l'état actuel des connaissances. Le deuxième chapitre est consacré à la conception et à la planification des projets de prévention. On y indique comment un projet devrait être élaboré pour qu'il mérite ensuite de subir le test de l'évaluation. Le troisième chapitre traite de la méthodologie de la recherche évaluative adaptée à la prévention. Le quatrième et dernier chapitre traite des données dont on a besoin pour évaluer la prévention, leurs sources et leur collecte.

This paper explains the proposed Yukon special waste management program, which will be phased in over coming years to prevent wastes such as oils, pesticides, and solvents from entering landfill sites and sewage systems and which will provide for a safe and secure storage and disposal of those wastes. The major elements of the system include a secure storage facility for special wastes, the tracking of wastes being transported, the identification of suitable disposal centers, educational and technical assistance to help waste producers identify wastes and reduce waste volume, and new legislation for managing special wastes. The program itself consists of three interrelated components: development of the special waste management system, a facility and site selection process, and a public education and consultation process.

Plasma glucose turnover during cold stress in humans

By André L. Vallerand, Ira Jacobs and Jiri Zamecnik. North York, ON : Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine, 1994. 7 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07965 (1 fiche)

The goal of this study was to determine the influence of cold stress on aspects of carbohydrate metabolism in humans, namely the turnover of plasma glucose and the extent of the contribution to whole-body carbohydrate oxidation from plasma glucose oxidation and from the combination of glycogen and lactate oxidation. The researchers combined two established investigatory techniques in the study: tracer techniques with stable isotopes and indirect calorimetry. The subjects were six males who rested at 29 and 10 degrees C dressed only in shorts, and who were infused with glucose for 3 hours in each condition to determine the plasma glucose rate of appearance, or turnover, under relative steady-state conditions. This paper presents the study results, including rates of carbohydrate oxidation versus time and plasma glucose enrichment versus time.

This paper reviews the state of the art in computational wind engineering, including the finite element method, the finite difference method, and control volume techniques. Part of the paper summarizes the research on computations carried out for a variety of building configurations, including normal wind flow conditions for a building with different aspect ratios, and on modelling wind environmental conditions around groups of buildings. Current research efforts into the computer modelling of wind effects on buildings are reviewed in three parts: computations with conventional turbulence modelling, computations with improved turbulence modelling, and computations using microcomputers. The paper concludes with views on future directions for computational wind engineering.

The availability of air navigation systems capable of supporting safe point-to-point navigation in controlled and uncontrolled airspace is considered to offer solutions for air traffic congestion at or near airports and in airspace generally. This study evaluates, in a simplified and preliminary manner, the impact on fuel consumption of operating airliners following smoothed point-to-point procedures, as compared to currently used practices (standard instrument departures, standard arrivals, air route/airway routings). The study is based on changes in the distance covered and the impact of this on operating time and therefore on fuel consumption. Fuel savings from relief of congestion would be additional to those impacts.

On a depuis lors rajusté les taux en fonction des taux d'inflation et des restrictions budgétaires provinciales lorsque cela était jugé nécessaire. Les données compilées dans ce rapport proviennent d'une étude de trois ans sur la productivité des planteurs d'arbres. On a recueilli un total de 226 échantillons des planteurs d'arbres sur l'ensemble des dix permis d'aménagement forestier entre 1988 et 1990. Les données ont été regroupées en cinq sous-ensembles de données en fonction du genre de scarification et des types de semis. On a effectué l'analyse des données au moyen d'analyses de la régression multiplicative simple.

Up to and including 1994 "Full" plant reimbursement rates on Crown Land have been based upon historical costs established by the Province (Department of Natural Resources) prior to 1983. Since that time, rates have been adjusted by inflation factors and provincial budget constraints when deemed necessary. The data compiled in this report are the result of a three-year planter productivity study. A total of 226 samples were gathered from tree planters on all ten Forest Management Licenses between 1988 and 1990. The data was divided into subdata sets according to scarification type and planting stock types. Data analysis was carried out utilizing simple multiplicative regression analyses. To determine the productivity of tree planters, variables such as the number of trees planted per hour, time to acquire more trees, and the refilling of trays were recorded. Time for rest periods, unrelated stoppages, and meal breaks were not included.

Current developments in improving positive acceleration (+ Gz) force tolerance for pilots of high-performance aircraft include design of G-suits with greater coverage and implementation of positive pressure breathing during + Gz (PBG). Inability to rapidly and efficiently generate different PBG and G-suit pressure schedules can limit research into optimal G-protection systems. This paper describes a computer-controlled life support system interface providing programmable schedules for G-suit inflation and PBG. The system controls output pressures from a G-valve and pressure breathing regulator by a Macintosh computer running LabVIEW software, and determines required pressures as functions of single or multiple control inputs. The paper reviews experiments and tests evaluating the system, demonstrating its ability to provide accurate and reproducible G-suit and mask pressures.

Provisions for service animals on regulated carriers

By Uwe Rutenberg and Tom Geehan ; prepared for the Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada. North Vancouver, BC : TransVision Consultants ; Kanata, Ont. : Rutenberg Design Inc., 1994. xviii, 58 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-07652 (1 fiche)

The objective of this report is to review the travel problems encountered by service animals (such as seeing eye dogs) and their owners, as well as the related problems of air carriers, travel agents, and terminal operators. The investigators conducted in-depth interviews with visually and hearing impaired persons who travel with service animals and addressed four issues: problems encountered during any aspect of the trip; particular problems in an emergency or evacuation situation; behavior of service animals under extreme circumstances; and knowledge of the passenger concerning emergency situations. The report identifies the most critical problems with the travel process involving service animals and includes recommendations on ways to alleviate some of the problems encountered in terminals, on board aircraft, and during emergencies and evacuations, by travellers with service animals.

Quality teaching, quality education for Alberta students : a discussion paper for consultations on enhancing the quality of teaching

Edmonton : Alberta Education, 1995. 20 p. ISBN 0-7732-1822-x MICROLOG 95-08157 (1 fiche)

This discussion paper details the three key strategies set out in the Alberta government's plan to improve the quality of teaching in Alberta schools. It outlines background information, education ministry proposals, provisions of the new proposed policies, and what the proposed changes would mean. The proposed changes involve amendment of the teacher certification regulation so that authority to teach in Alberta would be primarily based on competency rather than on qualifications; amendment of the provincial teacher evaluation policy to provide guidelines on how teachers and school boards can use effective teacher evaluation policies; and entering into new agreements with accredited post-secondary institutions to establish and facilitate a partnership between campus- and field-based educators. The appendix outlines examples of teaching knowledge, skills, and attributes that are desired for Alberta teachers.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans Salmonid and Habitat Sciences Division held an electrofishing workshop in 1993 to review objectives and purpose for conducting juvenile population estimates using electrofishing studies, to review the methodologies and equipment being used, and to determine if the technology is being properly applied. The workshop also examined related aspects of electrofishing studies and developed a consensus on techniques and methods to be employed, population estimators that could be used, potential applications of data collected, and appropriate habitat variables that could be collected. A follow-up workshop in 1994 reviewed and finalized recommendations on standardization of electrofishing techniques and collection of habitat attribute data as developed from the earlier workshop. This report includes a short review of papers and presentations from the 1993 workshop and a synopsis of discussions from both workshops addressing the workshop themes.

The Chatham-Wheatley area is located in southwestern Ontario and extends between Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair. It is dominated by the agricultural industry and has significant oil and gas deposits. This report presents results of a study conducted to determine the areal extent and distribution of various Quaternary geological materials that occur in the area. The report reviews the Paleozoic geology of the area, including bedrock lithology and economic geology, then describes the Quaternary geology, including glacial deposits and features, non-glacial deposits and features, stratigraphy, and glacial history. Finally, the report briefly assesses the area's agricultural soils and deposits of clay, sand, and gravel. Appendices include geochemical data, geotechnical data, mineralogical analyses, and sonic drillhole logs and data.

Contents: Vol. 1 : Introduction, Biophysical assessment, Resource use assessment -- vol. 2 : Stream summaries, Habitat sensitivity rating, Appendices. MICROLOG 95-08113 (7 fiche)

To maximize fisheries potential in the Fraser River system, the Dept of Fisheries and Oceans has created a task force to consolidate information for developing habitat management plans for each of the 16 Habitat Management Areas (HMAs) of the Fraser watershed. This report is an overview assessment of impacts to salmon resources within the Quesnel HMA, including the watersheds of the Quesnel River, Naver Creek, and Cottonwood River. The report begins with detailed descriptions of the HMA's physiography, climate, hydrology, and water demand from licensed water users. It then assesses the impacts on fish habitat from population and settlements, water and air quality, forest harvesting, mineral resource extraction, agriculture, roads and other linear developments, and recreation. The assessments are used to develop habitat sensitivity ratings in terms of fisheries significance, biophysical processes, and resource utilization.

This report collects together all the rate constants, pK values, and G -values required for the simulation of the radiolysis of light water, at near-neutral pH, over the temperature range of room temperature to 300 degrees C (a range covering nuclear power reactor water-coolant temperatures). Since very few of the rate constants have been measured over that whole range, the experimental data have been extrapolated using both the Arrhenius equation and the Noyes model. In general, each rate constant is given as a function of temperature using the Arrhenius equation; in some cases, a polynomial function was employed. The G -values for the radiolysis with low linear energy transfer radiation are given as linear functions of temperature. The report makes a preliminary estimate of the G -values for fast-neutron radiolysis at room temperature and at 300 degrees C, based on results of published ion-beam data and on unpublished high-temperature ion-beam studies.

David Milgaard was convicted in 1970 for the murder of Gail Miller. In early 1992, the Supreme Court heard an appeal in which it held that the presentation of additional and fresh evidence concerning the murder, together with the testimony heard, constituted credible evidence that could reasonably be expected to have affected the 1970 verdict. Later in 1992, Milgaard's solicitor alleged a miscarriage of justice in the Milgaard conviction, and both he and Mrs Milgaard claimed to have evidence suggesting a coverup by justice officials regarding evidence that another person was responsible for the murder. This report details an investigation of these and related allegations implying wrongdoing and coverups by police and prosecutors. The investigation included extensive reviews of Saskatoon City Police and Crown prosecution files, interviews with individuals who might have relevant information, and a review of forensic evidence.

Reducing the regulatory and paper burden on business and government : report

Manitoba. Advisory Panel on Business Regulations. Winnipeg : The Panel, 1994. ii, 34 p.
MICROLOG 95-08102 (1 fiche)

The issue of government regulation and their associated red tape and paper burden remains an area of significant concern to Manitoba business. This report presents the findings of an advisory panel created to recommend solutions that can streamline red tape and paperwork without compromising achievement of legitimate regulatory objectives, while recognizing the need for the Manitoba government to consult with, and be fair to, small business in regulation enactment and compliance. The report presents the recommendations of the panel in the following areas: developing guidelines to aid government in creating, amending, and replacing regulations; identifying new or improved procedures for effectively developing and reviewing regulations; identifying regulatory impacts on business; identifying measures to reduce red tape and paperwork; improving communications of business regulations; and non-regulatory alternatives.

This exploratory study documents refugee experiences in finding and securing accommodation in Toronto. The study methodology included retention of associates with links to specific minority communities, an ongoing literature review, interviews with community professionals and advocates, and focus groups with community professionals and refugees. This study report profiles government sponsored refugees and refugee claimants, presents composite case histories to illustrate the range of refugee experiences in finding housing, and summarizes the principal issues emerging from the study. These include lack of coordination of programs and services for refugees, employment and income restrictions, language issues, housing supply, discrimination, and housing quality. The report concludes with recommendations aimed at developing new strategies to improve housing programs and services. Appendices include focus group questions and a contact list.

MICROLOG 95-08195 (2 fiche)

The main objective of this study was to refine techniques for providing estimates of low flow characteristics for ungauged streams, based on the physical parameters of the watershed and appropriate meteorological variables. This report describes the study methods and presents results of testing methodologies for predicting low flows in central and southeastern Ontario. It begins with a literature review summarizing highlights from research on low-flow hydrologic estimation. It then summarizes the hydrometric, physiographic, and climatic data collected and screened for the analysis used to develop the low-flow estimation techniques. The report subsequently analyzes existing estimation techniques, considers four alternative methods of providing regional estimates (multiple linear regression, index method, mapped isolation, and proration from nearby gauges) and tests the relative prediction accuracy of those methods.

The main objective of this study was to develop a technique for providing estimates of low flow characteristics for a watercourse in southwestern and west central Ontario, based on the physical parameters of the watershed and appropriate meteorological variables. This report describes the study methods and presents results of testing methodologies for predicting low flows. A background review was used to select and confirm the most appropriate statistical techniques. The report summarizes the hydrometric, physiographic, and hydrometeorological data collected and screened for the analysis used to develop the low-flow estimation techniques, then considers four methods for regionalizing low-flow characteristics: regression analysis, the index method, mapping proration, and mapping isolines. Finally, the report presents test results showing the relative prediction accuracy of the four method developed.

The objective of this study was to examine the land use and management modules of selected soil degradation models, construct an inventory of the land use requirements of those models, and subsequently determine the structure, content, and data sources for a regional land use database. The land use data requirements were assessed for five models, of both equation- and process-based types. The inventory identified over 200 different variables; this list was then summarized into 118 common variables in nine general categories such as crop-related parameters, drainage, irrigation, plant management, and support practices. This summarized list of requirements essentially forms the contents and structure of the database. The study then identifies and characterizes sources of regional information for the land use variables and makes recommendations regarding a standard regional land use database.

Two branches of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans each conducted an independent study to determine the relationship between the weight of processed shrimp and the weight of completely unprocessed live shrimp. Each study investigated processed cooked and raw shrimp for the European market as well as processed raw shrimp for the industrial market and for the Japanese market. This report presents the results of those independent investigations. The results include the degree of weight loss according to processing procedure, weight losses due to thawing, and the effect of shrimping season on the weight changes caused by processing.

Report of Alberta Justice into allegations of criminal offences arising from the David Milgaard case

By Neil McCrank and Bruce Fraser. Edmonton : Alberta Justice, 1994. 16 p.
MICROLOG 95-08064 (1 fiche)

In 1992, allegations of criminal wrongdoing were made against the Saskatoon City Police and the Saskatchewan Department of Justice, essentially suggesting concealment of evidence resulting in a coverup and a miscarriage of justice relating to the conviction of David Milgaard in a murder case. This report results from a referral to the Deputy Attorney General of Alberta to solicit an objective opinion on these allegations, originally referred to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for investigation. This report only reviews the major allegations against the Saskatoon police, the Crown prosecutor, and members of the Saskatchewan Department of Justice. The report then presents its conclusions regarding the allegations.

This report describes work undertaken in the development and validation of a ship performance analysis system based on system identification (SI). The purpose of this system is to enable the accurate determination of a ship's resistance and propulsion factors from simple ship trials. The propulsion factors to be determined are the resistance coefficient in open water or in ice, the wake fraction, and the thrust deduction fraction. The work included review, validation, and adjustment of the stepwise parameter search optimization method; the possible use of an ice factor; the use of a greatly simplified ice resistance equation in the SI analysis, supplemented by a post-processing method; checking of the proposed methodology against the known performance of five ships; and an evaluation of whether to proceed and develop a prototype system. Complaints about fish and water tainting in the Peace and Athabasca river systems have been documented since at least the mid-1970s. Such tainting can be caused by pulp mill effluents, and there are 10 pulp/paper mills in the Peace and Athabasca basins. As the first stage in addressing these concerns, the Northern River Basins Study supported a study to review the literature on the incidence and likelihood of off-flavor tainting of water and fish, with an emphasis on tainting by pulp mill effluents. This report presents that review, in addition to a review of analytical methods for investigating water and fish-taste odor problems. The review identified a number of potential tainting compounds from various sources, including biological sources. The review also provides a background on the current state of knowledge on the tainting of water and fish, with a focus on potential sources of tainting in the study area.

The study methodology used a structured format in which senior personnel in 76% of all school boards in the province were interviewed. In addition, boards were asked to forward sample copies of written policies, protocols, and procedures for content analysis. Rice-fish culture in China

This book presents a translation of the proceedings of a national symposium of rice-fish farming in China. The practice is nearly 2,000 years old, and traditionally has been a means of raising fish with rice as an additional source of food. Rice-fish culture is now directed toward making the full use of the mutual benefits of both rice and fish, either by rotating rice and fish farming or by growing fish and rice together. Topics of papers presented at the symposium include rice-fish farming in various regions of China, rice-fish farming methods, economic and ecological benefits, rice-fish symbiosis, the role of fish in controlling insects and weeds, economic analysis of rice-fish farming, and ecological effects.

Rural waste water management issues in New Brunswick

Presented by: Miramichi River Environmental Assessment Committee, Northumberland Strait Sustainable Development Coordination Area Working Group. Chatham, NB : The Committee ; Bouctouche, NB : The Working Group, 1995. 35 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-07919 (1 fiche)

This document presents a status report on rural waste water management in New Brunswick. It first outlines problems with waste water in the rural sector, mostly related to single-family households, such as malfunctioning systems, neglect of septic tank cleaning and maintenance, inadequate tank materials and types, lack of awareness of elementary aspects of septic tank technology among homeowners, and the need for suitable access to the tanks so that they can be cleaned out easily. The report then reviews septic system technology, alternative technologies that deserve consideration, and the adequacy of existing regulations regarding on-site sewage systems. Recommendations are included throughout the report with regard to solutions to rural waste water management problems in the province.

A company known as Saskatchewan Harvest (Prairie Pantree) has produced and marketed fruit pies for Canadian Western Agribition sales for three years. To ensure that these pies are competitive before producing them for the retail market, the company undertook a market development study. This report presents results from the second phase of that study, consisting of a consumer sensory panel and an industry expert focus group. The panel compared Saskatchewan Harvest saskatoon pie to the Harvest Pie Company saskatoon pie and Saskatchewan Harvest rhubarb-strawberry pie to President's Choice rhubarb-strawberry pie. Comparison criteria included sweetness, amount of filling, amount of fruit in filling, and filling consistency. The industry experts also evaluated the pies and identified niche market possibilities in the hospitality trade.

The Library is a set of models that can be run on the SBR Simulation Laboratory in the functional simulation state, allowing for the detailed simulation of SBR target detection performance. The document details the seven model classes: SatControl, which controls the beam pointing direction for the SBR satellite; SatRadar, which models target detection evaluation; StaticAntenna, which maintains information on antenna patterns and attributes; StaticPlatform, which maintains information on satellite position and velocity; SimpleASM, which receives messages from other model classes; StaticTarget, which maintains information on a target; and ClutterEnviron, which calculates ground clutter. The user interfaces to each class are described in terms of the parameters and input and output messages. A high-level description of the algorithms implemented by each model is also provided.

This study has two purposes, the first is to examine the economic rationale for public sector support for science and technology and to consider the role that public policy plays in technological development. The second is to describe the role of science and technology in the process of economic growth and develop the microeconomic foundation for sound public policy. The study identifies the characteristics of certain scientific and technological endeavours to which private market mechanisms may allocate insufficient resources. This involves the analysis of such phenomena as spillovers, agglomeration economies, clustering, and generic and infra-technology R&D.

The Exemplary Schools Project aimed to identify and analyze successful practice in schools from different regions across Canada. The project examined five issues: the meaning and recognition of success; interaction between the school and its context; influences that foster success; student life; and services provided to students at risk of dropping out. The report begins with a discussion of secondary education in Canada in the 1990s and the challenges facing schools. It then describes the project, how the schools were selected, and the characteristics of the schools studied. Further chapters explore the issues of what counts as success, how curriculum is defined, students and the social curriculum, teacher commitment, relationships with the outside world, information sharing, and accountability. The report concludes with a discussion of the policy implications arising from the project findings.

This discussion paper is intended to invite public comments on the issue of finding a site for a special waste storage facility in the Yukon. The wastes to be handled by the facility would be those requiring special treatment or disposal, including waste oils, solvents, and wastes requiring specialized disposal not available in the Yukon (e.g. fluids containing polychlorinated biphenyls). The proposed facility would be a small, secure warehouse located somewhere in the Whitehorse area. The paper outlines the criteria for selecting a site for the facility, including land requirements, access, physical features, and climatic conditions. The paper concludes with a review of the site selection process.

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada ; by Human Factors North Inc. Toronto : The Corporation, 1995. xiv, 94 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-07635 (1 fiche)

Many watchkeepers in the Canadian Coast Guard currently operate on a 6 hours on, 6 hours off (6&6) schedule over a 28-day period. This schedule has been in use for several years with no apparent detriment in work performance. This study compares a new schedule combining 4-hour rest periods with 8-hour work periods in which the work period consists of 4 hours watchkeeping and 4 hours of routine work requiring less strained attention (called the 4&8 schedule). The investigators gathered four months of data on four east coast ships from shift-workers who used hand-held computers to collect information at the beginning and the end of each shift. This report compares the 6&6 and 4&8 schedules in terms of total sleep, mood, and worker performance (choice reaction time, short term memory), and also according to whether one schedule is preferable to another for either day or night shifts.

A sublethal early life stage test applicable to cold-water fish is needed to provide data for development of guidelines for protection of the aquatic environment against chronic effects of toxicants. This report describes tests conducted to substantiate the choice of the late sac fry to early swim-up fry stage of salmonid development as the most sensitive to use for optimal toxicant uptake and expression of toxicant effects, in a short-term sublethal early life stage test. The investigators developed a simple, cost-effective 12-day growth test using the aforementioned life stage of rainbow trout and evaluated the test protocol using copper sulfate, sodium dodecyl sulfate, 2,4,5-trichlorophenol, and 3,4-dichloroaniline as representative toxicants. The report describes the test methodology and presents results of tests used during the latter stage of the test development, as well as data interpretation.

This report details a protocol for a short-term early life stage growth test developed to provide a simple, cost-effective test with the least possible uncertainty to estimate the concentrations of toxicants that are likely to cause chronic toxic effects on the aquatic environment. The late sac fry to swim-up fry life stage of rainbow trout is used since this is the shortest, most sensitive period which includes both uptake of toxicants and expression of effects. The fry are exposed in individual containers and at swim-up are fed shrimp for 5 days or chemicals with low absorption rates for 14 days. Sublethal test concentrations are used to provide greater sensitivity than tests using survival and growth as dual endpoints. The protocol can be used for monitoring possible chronic toxicity levels in non-acutely lethal effluents, receiving waters, leachates, and elutriates, as well as providing data for development of water quality standards for individual chemicals.

This report presents simulation results for fuel consumption and emissions for selected Montreal and Toronto bus routes, including morning and evening rush hours and off-peak hours. The report also analyzes the costs of the hybrid bus and compares them to those of a conventional bus. Soil fertility levels for balsam fir Christmas tree culture

By Helmut H. Krause. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1993. 8 p. : ill., Bibl. Funded through the Canada-New Brunswick Cooperation Agreement on Forest Development.
MICROLOG 95-07503 (1 fiche)

This paper describes a study designed to detect relationships among current levels of productivity and soil fertility in New Brunswick fields of balsam fir, and to define soil fertility standards based on such relationships. In this context, soil fertility was determined by variables such as total nitrogen, pH, available nitrogen and phosphorus, exchangeable potassium and calcium, and organic matter. The investigator sampled trees and soils on 39 fields throughout the province, determining mean annual height increment as a measure of productivity. The report shows Pearson product-moment correlation coefficients for selected growth and soil variables and tentatively defines supply levels for exchangeable potassium and available phosphorus.

Some perspectives on academic freedom, autonomy and accountability : background paper

Toronto : Ontario Council on University Affairs, Task Force on Resource Allocation, 1995. i, 42 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07599
MICROLOG 95-07591 (1 fiche)

This paper discusses the concept of university autonomy and the way in which academic freedom and accountability relate to it. The paper also examines the nature of university-government relationships; the nature and importance of academic freedom; the limits of academic freedom; and the way in which academic freedom differs from university autonomy. The paper then evaluates the pressures for greater government intrusion into university affairs and the implications for autonomy of the demand for greater accountability. The paper suggests the need for reconciliation of government and university perspectives on these issues and discusses various mechanisms of reconciliation.

This manual describes the installation, administration, and maintenance procedures for the Space-Based Radar Simulation Laboratory (SimLab). The SimLab is a software simulation package that can be installed on SPARC-based workstations as a standalone system or as part of a network. The software allows simulation of space-based radar performance and operations as either an isolated surveillance and tracking system or within the context of a comprehensive North American air defense system. SimLab presently consists of three main software components: a generic simulator and two sets of model libraries. Chapters of the manual describe the hardware environment required to run SimLab, the installation of the operating system and third-party software required by SimLab, the SimLab software installation and organization, shutdown procedures, management of user accounts and libraries, user utilities and tools, configuration management, data backup and recovery, and troubleshooting.

Space efficient execution of deterministic parallel programs tre for Systems Science and Laboratory for Computer & Communications Research (B.C.) ; CSS/LCCR TR94-25)

MICROLOG 95-08130 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This paper models a deterministic parallel program by a directed acyclic graph of tasks, where a task can execute as soon as all tasks above it have been executed. Each task can allocate or release an arbitrary amount of memory. A parallel schedule is said to be space efficient if the amount of memory required is at most equal to the number of processors times the amount of memory required for some depth-first execution of the program by a single processor. The paper describes a simple, locally depth-first, scheduling algorithm and shows whether it is space efficient and how close it is to being optimal with respect to time. Finally, the paper shows how scheduling can be decentralized, making the approach developed scalable to a large number of processors when there is sufficient parallelism.

Spray drift and vegetation buffers for aquatic environments

This paper reports on investigations addressing three related questions: how droplet size and wind velocity can influence swath displacement of an aerially applied herbicide; why vegetation buffers are necessary to reduce spray drift into aquatic environments; and the role of vegetation on the margins of these environments. The research involved application of herbicide using a helicopter equipped with several types of spray booms, and the effect of boom type on the influence of wind on spray displacement was compared. The paper reviews the literature to explain why pesticide-free zones along streams may not necessarily eliminate herbicide transport into aquatic environments, to note the indirect impacts on streams from a loss of riparian vegetation, and to assess the consequent impacts on fish habitat.

As tuition fees for Ontario universities remain capped and financial pressures increase, universities have turned to so-called ancillary fees as a source of budget relief. Government policy allows for these fees to be charged for non-tuition related expenses, which leads to an often arbitrary distinction between academic and non-academic expenses. The statement reviews existing government policy in this area and the effect of increased ancillary fees on students. It also discusses who should pay the costs of university education, the question of cost accountability, the effect of ancillary fees on resource allocation, and the options available to the Ministry of Education and Training regarding ancillary fees. The statement ends with recommendations on compulsory ancillary fees.

This report presents results of experiments in a boundary layer wind tunnel to investigate the equalization of mean pressure occurring in rainscreen walls. The investigators used a module comprising a variable number of vented compartments to determine external mean pressure distributions, mean cavity pressures, and resulting mean pressures across the outer wall of a rectangular building model at six locations on the long face. At each location, wind angles ranging from normal to parallel to the long building face were examined. The bulk of experiments were performed using a compartment width of two meters in full scale. The results presented include external pressure gradients and their distribution over the building surface, the effect of compartment size on net mean rainscreen pressures, and the effect of decreasing mean pressure gradient on rainscreen pressures.

The researchers obtained very high strain rates, up to a million times the variation of the stress intensity factor with time, by using a specially designed swing-arm split Hopkinson bar system. The research focused on the use of the stretch zone width to characterize the fracture toughness. The work program involved the following specific tasks: study of the evolution of blunting lines as a function of temperature and loading rates; evaluation of the fracture transition curve for crack tip specimens using total energy analysis, stretch zone width, and measurement of the shear lips; evaluation of the stretch zone; and study of the effect of fatigue prestraining on the deformation of the stretch zone. The researchers also examined the strain distribution ahead of the crack tip using neutron diffraction.

Edmonton : The Committee, 1994. x, 45 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Alberta. Reclamation Research Technical Advisory Committee ; RTAC OF-5) MICROLOG 95-08080 (1 fiche)

In the past, disturbances related to Shell Canada gas extraction activities in the Waterton area of Alberta were either recontoured and left to revegetate naturally or were reseeded using available agronomic species. Concerns regarding loss of natural habitats and the detrimental aspects of using agronomic plants rather than native species for site reclamation prompted a study to determine if native plants were re-establishing on native sites and to examine if the non-native, agronomic seedling mixtures used in the past were persisting and having detrimental effects. The investigators chose eleven sites for study, representing a variety of aspects, elevations, vegetation types, disturbance types, and reclamation ages. This report presents the study results, including frequency of invading species at the sites and recommendations regarding native species for use in site reclamation.

Calgary (Alta.). Planning & Building Dept. Calgary, AB : The Dept., 1995. ix, 110 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07875 (2 fiche)

This report is intended to facilitate the design of new residential communities in Calgary. The design approach involves the concept of sustainable suburbs, in which the costs of building, maintaining, and operating new communities and their supportive infrastructure are affordable; communities are designed to be socially diverse, adaptable, and capable of fulfilling such goals as providing access to affordable housing, services, and amenities; and communities are designed to minimize environmental degradation and to protect natural systems. The report first reviews population trends in Calgary and the consequent demands on funding, land use, and infrastructure. It then presents policies and processes for designing more sustainable communities in Calgary. For each policy, the intended public benefit, performance standards, design guidelines, and explanatory comments are provided. Finally, the report discusses improving the planning process and implementing the sustainable suburbs concept. Includes glossary.

Fishways have traditionally been designed to provide safe passage for jumping fish and only recently have non-jumping species been considered. Concern over dwindling populations of lake sturgeon has focused attention on fishway designs that accommodate its swimming abilities. The objective of this study was to derive models that describe swimming endurance and critical speed (5 centimeter per second increment, 10 minute interval) for lake sturgeon. The investigators determined lake sturgeon swimming performance for 58 individuals 12 to 132 centimeters in total length. This report presents results of this study, including swimming performance relative to body length, dependence of endurance with total length and temperature, and critical speed, representing the maximum velocity a fish can maintain for a prescribed time period. The report also discusses the practical application of the derived model.

Ce rapport traite des zones d'intervention prioritaire 1 et 2, qui représentent le lac Saint-François. Il traite des caractéristiques physiques et chimiques de l'eau et des sédiments des ZIP 1 et 2 du lac Saint-François et de leur impact sur les usages de ce plan d'eau. Après une description générale du milieu physique, le rapport examine les diverses sources de pollution municipales et industrielles, en provenance des tributaires et diffuses, ainsi que les apports. Ensuite, les résultats des études existantes sont comparés aux critères de qualité de l'eau du ministère de l'Environnement et de la Faune du Québec et aux critères de qualité des sédiments récemment développés par Procéan sous la direction d'un comité intergouvernemental.

Ce rapport technique fait partie de la programmation Zones d'intervention prioritaire du plan d'action Saint-Laurent Vision 2000 et concerne plus spécifiquement les ZIP 1 et 2, soit la région du lac Saint-François. Il vise à dresser un portrait de l'occupation humaine et des interrelations entre les activités humaines et la ressource fluviale pour le territoire à l'étude. Deux volets de l'occupation humaine sont abordés : l'aménagement du territoire et les activités humaines. Le document a pour objet de donner un premier aperçu des interrelations entre l'occupation humaine et la ressource eau (incluant le milieu riverain) sous le rapport de la portée économique, sociale et environnementale des usages liés à cette ressource polyvalente. Ce faisant, il vise à dégager, de façon préliminaire, les opportunités et les problèmes d'harmonisation des divers usages de l'eau en vue de mieux cibler des interventions éventuelles.

A Synthesis of technical research and its potential for application in linear infrastructure renewal

CH2M Hill Engineering Ltd. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1994. xvii, 119 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-07866 (2 fiche)

This study brings together a diverse collection of research items to examine how each can be synthesized into a useful and more cost-effective municipal infrastructure. It attempts to identify concerns and problems with the current state of municipal linear infrastructure in Canada and elsewhere, and to match these with possible business opportunities. The study aims to encourage new thinking and the recognition that alternative, non-traditional approaches will be necessary for linear infrastructure systems of the future. The study reviews linear infrastructure systems in Canada, including infrastructure design methods, materials, treatment process selection, operation and maintenance, jurisdictional issues, and regulations. It then evaluates infrastructure needs and societal trends, and reviews current research and technology and its applications. Barriers to new technology are identified, as well as the roles of government, the private sector, and other parties in renewing municipal infrastructure.

Ce rapport donne les grandes lignes d'une méthode de classification des terres selon leurs aptitudes à la production des céréales de printemps (et des oléagineux rustiques) au Canada. Ce système a été élaboré pour répondre à un certain nombre de questions concernant l'inventaire des terres du Canada. Les principaux objectifs du rapport sont de clarifier et de préciser les paramètres d'entrée pour permettre la documentation et l'automatisation de la classification, pour élaborer une méthode nationale uniforme et pour prévoir l'expansion du système de classification de façon à inclure une variété de cultures. Il permet de relever les faiblesses et d'orienter les essais et les recherches nécessaires à son amélioration. Le but visé est d'améliorer la qualité et, en particulier, uniformiser la classification des sols du Canada selon leurs aptitudes.

During past search and rescue (SAR) experiments, targets have been moored. With the advancement of positioning and recording capabilities, it is now feasible to conduct these experiments using drifting targets, allowing collection of data in a more realistic manner while also allowing for the collection of data for related SAR research. This report includes an experiment plan that provides a framework for future experiments as well as recommendations with respect to data collection requirements for those experiments. During the course of the work, the investigators conducted a validation trial off Nova Scotia in fall 1994, including daylight searches for four- and six-person life rafts. The report also presents the results of an analysis of these trials and makes various recommendations on the SAR detection trials planned for fall 1995.

Targeting Asia Pacific, towards a strategy for growth : discussion paper

Edmonton : Alberta Economic Development & Tourism, 1994. ii, 61 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-07536 (1 fiche)

The Asia Pacific region, from Japan around to New Zealand, is already Alberta's second largest export market. Capturing a larger share of this market depends on Alberta's ability to produce value-added products and services, and on the ability to sell these in a competitive market. This discussion document demonstrates the potential of the rapidly expanding Asia Pacific economy and proposes a strategy for Alberta to increase trade and investment with the region. The document reviews the province's strengths in the Asia Pacific market, including infrastructure and capabilities in nine industries targeted for growth. It also assesses opportunities for Alberta companies in individual countries. The strategy has three main elements: maintaining a competitive business climate; developing target industries and technologies; and developing Asia Pacific markets via such means as market intelligence and strategic alliances. A directory of market development programs and services is included.

Data originates from a recent Statistics Canada survey, asking manufacturing firms about their use of 22 advanced manufacturing technologies. Results are based on the linkage of a Statistics Canada technology survey to panel data taken from the Census of Manufacturers. This permits an evaluation of the nature of technology use in Canada, as well as a comparison of the market share, productivity, employment share, and wage rates of establishments using, and not using, advanced manufacturing technologies.

Recent changes to the 1990 National Building Code of Canada and to standards for gypsum board products may have an effect on the fire performance of gypsum wallboard assemblies. As a result, the Institute for Research in Construction and eight industry partners conducted research to determine the extent of such an effect. This report presents the temperature measurements from fire resistance tests conducted on small-scale, non-insulated gypsum wallboard protected assemblies with and without resilient channels. Assemblies with resilient channels included the installation of channels between the wood studs and the gypsum wallboard on the exposed side, on the unexposed side, and on both sides. Gypsum wallboard arrangements studied were one layer of board on both the exposed and unexposed sides, and two layers of board on both sides. The results presented include the average temperature distribution on the unexposed surface and on the inner surfaces.

This report presents temperature measurements from fire resistance tests conducted on insulated and non-insulated small-scale regular gypsum board protected assemblies. Assemblies studied were two layers of board on each of the exposed and unexposed sides, on wood and on lightweight steel studs. Three types of regular gypsum board were studied: 7.82 kilogram per square meter density, without glass fiber in the gypsum board core; 7.35 kilogram per square meter density with glass fiber in the core; and 7.27 kilogram per square meter density without glass fiber in the core. The insulations used were glass, mineral, and cellulose (blown dry) fibers. The tests addressed the effect of using different insulations, types of studs, gypsum board density, and presence of glass fiber in the core on the fire performance of the small-scale wallboard assemblies. The results presented include average temperatures on the unexposed and inner surfaces.

A Theory of spectral line shape for atmospheric absorption, part III : the Fano collision operator from near to far wing

MICROLOG 95-07959 (1 fiche)

The non-Lorentzian nature of the far wings of spectral line shapes is an important phenomenon in the description and modelling of atmospheric transmission. Fano (1963) developed an approach to spectral line theory whose essential basis was the definition of a collision super operator which is a function of the frequency of the applied radiation field. This paper evaluates the frequency dependence of the complete Fano operator using previously developed collision time theory. The paper begins with a review of the nature of the terms in the Fano operator as discussed by that author, then summarizes the collision time theory results. The paper applies this theory to each of the terms of the Fano operator and examines the contributions to the near and far line wing. Experimental confirmation for the line wing behavior is also presented.

The tornado had winds as fast as 270 kilometers per hour and an estimated forward speed of 70 kilometers per hour. It completed its path in under two minutes, severely damaged about 30 houses, and caused varying degrees of damage to at least 150 other houses. Types of damages discussed in the paper include removal of roofs, collapse of walls, broken windows, and sprayed insulation. The paper identifies deficiencies in anchorage details requiring quality control during house construction in order to avoid or minimize tornado damage problems.

This guide is intended to help individuals or groups who are interested in expanding an existing business or developing a new tourism-related venture in the Yukon. The guide is divided into four key sections: planning, financing, startup, and operating. The section on planning discusses the preliminary steps to take when considering a tourism venture. It examines the tourism market and its resources, discusses a physical development plan, and outlines some steps and considerations that pertain at the beginning, such as looking at preliminary land and building approvals. The guide then addresses key aspects of researching a tourism project, developing a business plan, searching for capital and investors, putting the plan into action, and obtaining regulatory approvals necessary to operate. Finally, the guide notes some of the important aspects of operating a tourism business including staffing, maintenance, and advertising.

Trends in the abundance of chinook salmon, Oncorhynchus tshawytscha, of the Nechako River, British Columbia

By Michael J. Bradford. Ottawa : National Research Council, 1994. 9 p. : ill., Bibl. In Canadian Journal of Fisheries and Aquatic Sciences : vol. 51, no. 4, 1994.
MICROLOG 95-07795 (1 fiche)

This paper analyzes trends in the abundance of chinook salmon to quantify the ecological effects of water abstraction for electricity generation on the Nechako River. Trends of the escapement of Nechako chinook are compared with a composite trend derived from the abundance of chinook spawners from nearby unregulated streams. This method relies on the assumption that variation in mortality after residence in the natal stream will be similar for both the Nechako chinook and the aggregate of stocks from unregulated streams, so that any differences in population trends will be due to the effects specific to the Nechako River. The paper also tests the hypothesis that proportionately smaller flows in the upper Nechako have had a greater impact on chinook productivity compared with further downstream, where the discharge regime is closer to the historical hydrograph.

MICROLOG 95-08050 (1 fiche)

This paper presents an evaluation of a proposal to develop a dandelion bioherbicide as part of a broader goal to develop turf grass biocontrol agents. The bioherbicide would consist of a stable, virulent, ecologically incompetent isolate from the necrotrophic plant pathogen Sclerotinia sclerotiorum. The paper includes a preliminary evaluation of the commercial potential for turf grass biocontrol agents in North America, an evaluation of the funding request regarding research at the dandelion bioherbicide project at the University of Guelph, a recommendation regarding early-stage funding, and an opinion regarding the feasibility of achieving the proposed commercialization schedule for the bioherbicide and the potential impact on the schedule by outside technical review.

This report studies the evolution of housing technology, house design, and urban planning in Canada from 1946 to 1965, with special attention to the role of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other federal agencies. The history is based on manuscript and other written sources, as well as extensive interviews with those involved in technical and planning aspects of housing work. The first part of the report examines the context of postwar government housing programs, the main players in the housing field, and technology transfer initiatives. The second part examines technical aspects of experiments, tests, and other technical initiatives by the Corporation in conjunction with other agencies. These initiatives included the use of new building techniques such as prefabrication, new materials, special designs for severe climates, and innovative approaches to sewage systems. The third part covers the Corporation's role in urban planning and house design.

This paper provides an overview of selected commissions, reports, and other initiatives which have had implications for the roles of government and universities in system-level university coordination and planning in Ontario since 1945. It draws extensively on government reports and notes that little attention is paid to the reactions to the reports reviewed. The overview is divided into the following historical periods: 1945-73, a time of university expansion and calls for coordination and planning; 1974-82, a time of system-level academic program coordination and planning; 1980-90, a time of debate on the roles of government and universities in system coordination and planning; and 1990-95, addressing coordination and planning across the post-secondary sector.

This report presents findings of a review of the role of university research in the current economic and social environment of Alberta, the role of Alberta Advanced Education and Career Development in university research, and the appropriate goals, policies, and strategies for Alberta's university research system, plus related issues. The review included drafting of a discussion paper and a series of formal consultations with university administrators, faculty, students, research institutes, the private sector, and Alberta government departments and agencies that have a direct interest in university research. The report includes an overview of Alberta university research and a summary of the consultations, which considered such issues as the role of university research, its quality and standards, funding, accountability, and responsiveness to change. The report concludes with a policy framework and recommendations on improving the university research system.

Cette étude porte sur l'utilisation de la technologie au sein du secteur manufacturier au Canada et sur le rendement d'un groupe d'établissements manufacturiers qui utilisent la technologie par rapport à un groupe de non-utilisateurs. Les données ont été tirées d'une enquête menée récemment par Statistique Canada, dans le cadre de laquelle on interrogeait des entreprises de fabrication au sujet de leur utilisation de 22 technologies manufacturières de pointe. Les résultats proviennent d'un couplage d'une enquête sur la technologie menée par Statistique Canada à des données recueillies auprès d'un échantillon constant de répondants dans le cadre du Recensement des manufactures. Il est ainsi possible d'évaluer la façon dont les technologies sont utilisées au Canada et d'établir une comparaison entre les établissements utilisateurs et les non-utilisateurs pour ce qui touche la part de marché, la productivité, la part de l'emploi et les taux de rémunération.

This paper discusses the process by which violence against women became an item on the institutional agenda of the state and an issue given serious consideration and public resources by decisionmakers. It examines the effectiveness of the Canadian women's movement in raising the issue in the consciousness of the public and shifting public discourse from a focus on interpersonal relationships to an emphasis on the systemic causes and consequences of violence against women. The paper then reviews federal family violence initiatives, the focusing on violence against women following the Montreal student massacre, the Statistics Canada national Violence Against Women Survey, and municipal initiatives to prevent violence against women, including Safe City programs.

Le problème de la violence familiale au sein des collectivités des premières nations et des Métis exige une attention et une action immédiates. Tout porte à croire qu'il s'est considérablement aggravé. Chez les Indiens, par exemple, des études ont montré que le dossier le plus important, sur le plan de la mortalité autant que de la morbidité, est celui des accidents et de la violence. Ce mémoire n'est pas consacré à la violence familiale en général, même s'il s'agit là d'un problème qu'il conviendrait d'étudier plus attentivement, mais plutôt aux effets de la violence familiale sur les femmes, les adolescentes et les enfants autochtones. En outre, comme une bonne partie de la violence familiale se manifeste par l'agression sexuelle, on s'attarde à la violence sexuelle dans les collectivités autochtones.

The issue of domestic violence in First Nations and Métis communities is one that demands urgent study and action. There is every indication that violence has escalated dramatically. For example, studies show what among Indians the single most important group of health problems in terms of both mortality and morbidity is accidents and violence. The goal of this paper is not to comment on family violence generally, though it does require further comment. This paper focuses on family violence as it affects Aboriginal women, teenagers and children. And since much family violence involves sexual assault, special attention is given to sexual violence within the Aboriginal community.

Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1995. iv, 68 p. : ill. ISBN 0-7729-3317-0 MICROLOG 95-08202 (1 fiche)

The Water Plant Optimization Study was initiated in Ontario in 1987 to document and review the existing conditions at each of the 44 water supply systems being studied and to determine an optimum treatment strategy at each plant, with emphasis on particulate removal and disinfection processes. All studies were completed by 1993. This report compiles overall information from the plant investigation and process evaluation studies carried out for each plant or supply system studied. Each study included such tasks as documentation and verification of raw and treated water quantity and quality, process assessments using existing capital works, and evaluation of short- and long-term modifications for improved performance. This compendium includes a review of the most common performance-limiting factors revealed by the plant studies. Summaries of the final reports for each water supply system studied can be found on fiche 95-08205.

The Water Plant Optimization Study, completed in the early 1990s, documented and reviewed the conditions at each of 44 water supply facilities in Ontario and determined an optimum treatment strategy for each, with emphasis on disinfection and particulate removal processes. The facilities selected for the study cover a large percentage of the provincial population over a wide geographic area. This publication contains summaries of each of the 44 individual studies. Each summary contains general plant data and information, along with lists of unit processes, treatment chemicals, and general operating procedures. A profile of raw and treated water turbidity is also shown, and lists are included of consultants' recommendations for physical improvements to the facilities and additional studies that should be conducted. This strategy is intended to form a framework within which to develop specific approaches and programs to meet the present and future training needs of the Yukon. It provides a direction and guide for training development in the territory, emphasizing the development of training partnerships with the public and private sectors. The strategy presented in this document is a revision of the 1986 Yukon Training Strategy, reflecting the increasing involvement of First Nations and the private sector, demands for more sharply focused priorities, and governmental fiscal restraints. The document notes the scope, principles, and fundamental approaches of the revised strategy, and outlines specific initiatives in meeting First Nation training needs, improving participation of women in the labor force, increasing training and employment access for the disabled, private sector partnerships, and developing trade skills.
